mer ages, was but like making a man, "when he is old," to "possess the iniquities of his youth," Job xiii. 26. And there is no unrighteousness with God in doing so. But, 2. They intended it as a reflection upon God, and an impeachment of his equity in his proceedings against them. Thus far that is right, which is implied in this proverbial saying, That they who are guilty of wilful sin "eat sour grapes," they do that which they will feel from, sooner or later. The grapes may look well enough in the temptation, but they will be bitter as bitterness itself in the reflection. They will set the sinner's "teeth on edge;" when conscience is awake, and sets the sin in order before them, it will spoil the relish of their comforts as when the teeth are "set on edge."—Henry.

ITS DISUSE.—Ver. 3, 4. In the most solemn manner, the Lord assured the people that he would bring this proverb into entire disuse; by exposing their crimes to public view, at the time when he executed vengeance upon them. It was absurd, as well as profane, to suppose that he would punish the innocent instead of the guilty: seeing he had, as Creator, a sovereign right and power to deal with all men as he pleased. The life or soul of one man was as much regarded by him as that of another: he had the soul of the father as absolutely at his disposal as that of the son; and he could have no motive for letting the one escape with impunity, in order to punish the other in his stead. But "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." According to the law, death, temporal and eternal, is the wages of every sin; and the impenitent sinner remains under this condemnation notwithstanding the gospel. Some commentators explain this of the temporal death, which was about to come on the wicked Jews, by sword, famine, and pestilence; and they would confine the whole chapter to these events. But it cannot be proved that every righteous man escaped those temporal judgments, or that all who survived them were righteous: without which the whole interpretation must fall for want of a foundation, chap. xxi. 3, 4. Many, indeed, of the pious Jews had "their lives given to them for a prey;" but even what Jeremiah, Baruch, and others, endured, in the siege and after the taking of Jerusalem, nearly equalled the external sufferings of many wicked men among them; and none of those who survived the siege escaped captivity or exile. —Scott.

GOD'S ANXIETY FOR MAN'S SALVATION.—Ver. 30—32. 1. Here are four necessary duties that we are called to; all amounting to the same. (1.) We must "repent;" we must change our mind and change our ways; we must be sorry for what we have done amiss, and ashamed of it, and go as far as we can toward the undoing of it again. (2.) We must "turn ourselves from all our transgressions," and again, "Turn yourselves," face about; turn "from sin," nay, turn against it as the enemy you loathe, turn to God as the Friend you love. (3.) We must "cast away from us all our transgressions," we must abandon and forsake them with a resolution never to return to them again; give sin a bill of divorce, break all the leagues you have made with it, throw it overboard as the mariners did Jonah, for it has raised the storm; cast it out of the soul, and crucify it as a malefactor. (4.) We must "make us a new heart and a new spirit." This was the matter of a promise, chap. xi. 19, here it is the matter of a precept; we must do our endeavour, and then God will not be wanting to us to give us his grace. St. Austin well explains this precept: Deus non jubet impossibilia, sed jubendo monet et facere quod possis et petere quod non possis—God does not enjoin impossibilities, but by his commands admonishes us to do what is in our power, and to pray for what is not. 2. Here are two good arguments used to enforce these calls to repentance. (1.) It is the only way, and it is a sure way, to prevent the ruin which our sins have a direct tendency to; "So iniquity shall not be your ruin;" which implies that, if we do not repent, iniquity will be our ruin, here and for ever, but that if we do, we are safe, we are snatched as brands from the burning. (2.) If we repent not, we certainly perish, and our blood will be upon our own heads. "Why will ye die, O house of Israel?" What an absurd thing it is for you to choose death and damnation rather than life and salvation. Note, The reason why sinners die is, because they "will die," they will go down the way that leads to death, and not come up to the terms on which life is offered; herein sinners, especially sinners of the house of Israel, are most unreasonable, and act most unaccountably.—Henry.

CHAP. XIX.—FAITHFUL WARNINGS.—Ver. 2—9. The inquiry and answer must not be understood of the mother of Zedekiah, or of the other branches of Josiah's family, but of the Jewish church and nation: which is represented under the image of a lioness, because of the cruelty and oppression which generally prevailed; for the rulers and people of Judah seemed to have lost their humanity, and to have been transformed into savage beasts. The lioness lay down among lions: that is, the Jews formed alliances with the heathens, and learned their manners. Thus she brought up her whelps with lions: that is, the sons of Josiah, though descended from so good a father, yet learned from the people and princes, and the surrounding nations, to be ambitious, oppressive, and rapacious, like the tyrants and conquerors of the Gentiles. When Josiah was slain, the people of the land made Jehoahaz king in his stead; and this lion's whelp, being advanced to royal authority, became a young lion, and soon learned to use his power in oppression and cruelty. But Pharaoh-necho and his allies came against him, and took him as a wild beast in a pit; and he was carried thence in chains into Egypt, where he died. And when the people saw there were no hopes of his return, they submitted to out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness;

11 And [d]I gave them my statutes, and [‡]shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them.[4]

12 Moreover also [f]I gave them my sabbaths, [g]to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that [h]I am the LORD that sanctify them.

13 But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; [m]and my sabbaths they greatly polluted: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them.

14 But [o]I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out.

15 Yet also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands;

16 Because [r]they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: [s]for their heart went after their idols.

17 Nevertheless [t]mine eye spared them from destroying them, [u]neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

18 But I said unto their children in the wilderness,[5] Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols:

19 I am [a]the LORD your God; [b]walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

20 And [c]hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the LORD your God.

21 Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to [g]accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless [h]I withdrew mine hand, and [i]wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

23 I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness,[6] [l]that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries;

24 Because [m]they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and [n]their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

He made over himself to them as their God in covenant; "I lifted up my hand unto them," saying it, and confirming it, with an oath, "'I am the Lord your God,' to whom you are to pay your homage, and from whom and in whom you are to expect your bliss." 4. He promised to bring them out of Egypt; and make good what he promised. He "lifted up His hand," that is, he sware unto them that he would deliver them; and they being very unworthy, and their deliverance very unlikely, it was requisite that the promise of it should be "confirmed by an oath." Or, he "lifted up his hand," that is, he put forth his almighty power to do it; he did it with an "outstretched arm," Ps. cxxxvi. 12. 5. He assured them that he would put them in possession of the land of Canaan. He therefore brought them out of Egypt, "that he might bring them into a land that he had spied" out "for them;" a second garden of Eden, which was "the glory of all lands;" so he found it, the climate temperate, the soil fruitful, the situation pleasant, and every thing agreeable, Deut. viii. 7; xi. 12. However, so he made it, by setting up his sanctuary in it.

ISRAEL'S INGRATITUDE.—Ver. 8. "They rebelled against God;" not only refused to comply with his particular precepts, but shook off their allegiance, and in effect told him that they would be at liberty to worship what God they pleased. And even then when God came down to deliver them, and sent Moses for that purpose, yet they would not "forsake the idols of Egypt;" which perhaps made them speak so affectionately of the "onions of Egypt," Num. xi. 5, for among other things the Egyptians worshipped an onion. It was strange that all the plagues of Egypt would not prevail to cure them of their affection to the "idols of Egypt." For this, God said he would "pour out his fury upon them," even while they were yet "in the midst of the land of Egypt." Justly might he have said, "Let them die with the Egyptians." This magnifies the riches of God's goodness, that he was pleased to work so great a salvation for them, even then when he saw them "ripe for ruin." Well might Moses tell them, it is "not for your righteousness," Deut. ix. 4, 5. The wonderful deliverance which God wrought for them, notwithstanding. Though they forfeited the favour while it was in the bestowing, and when God "would have healed them" then their "iniquity was discovered," Hos. vii. 1, yet "mercy rejoiced against judgment," and God did what he designed, purely, "for his own name's sake," ver. 9. When nothing in us will furnish him with a reason for his favours, he furnishes himself with one. God "made himself known" to them "in the sight of the heathen," when he ordered Moses publicly to say to Pharaoh, Israel is "my son, my first-born," let them go, "that they may serve me." Now if he should have left them to perish for their wickedness as they deserved, the Egyptians would have 25 Wherefore [o]I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live:

26 And I polluted them in their own gifts, [q]in that they caused to pass through the fire [r]all that openeth the womb,[7] that I might make them desolate, [s]to the end that they might know that I am the LORD.

27 ¶ Therefore, son of man, [t]speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have [§]committed a trespass against me.

28 For [x]when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering: there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out their drink offerings.

29 Then ‖I said unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go? [‡]And the name thereof is called Bamah unto this day.[8]

30 Wherefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [b]Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?

31 For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day: [d]and shall I be enquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will not be enquired of by you.

32 And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, [§]to serve wood and stone.

33 ¶ As I live, saith the Lord GOD, [b]surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you:

34 And I will bring you out from the people,[9] and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out.

35 And [k]I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, [l]and there will I plead with you face to face.

36 Like [m]as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord GOD.

37 And I will cause you to [n]pass under the rod, and [o]I will bring you into [*]the bond of the covenant:

38 And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and [q]they shall not enter into the land of Israel; [r]and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord GOD, Go ye,[10] serve ye every one his idols, and hereafter also, if ye will not hearken unto me: [t]but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

40 For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord GOD, [x]there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings, and the [†]first-fruits of your oblations, with all your holy things.[11]

41 I will accept you with your [‡]sweet savour, when I bring you out from the people, and gather you out of the countries wherein ye have been scattered; [*]and I will be sanctified in you before the heathen.

42 And [b]ye shall know that I am the LORD, [c]when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country [d]for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers.

43 And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed.

44 And ye shall know that I am the LORD, [g]when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord GOD.

45 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,[12]

46 Son of man, set thy face toward the south, and drop thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest of the south field;

47 And say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the LORD; Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [l]I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree: [n]the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces [o]from the south to the north[13] shall be burned therein.

48 And [p]all flesh shall see that I the LORD have kindled it: it shall not be quenched.

49 Then said I, Ah Lord GOD! they say of me, [q]Doth he not speak parables?

reflected upon him for it, and his name would have been polluted, which ought to be sanctified, and shall be so. Note, The church is secured, even when it is corrupt, because God will secure his own honour.

THE HOLY SABBATH.—Ver. 12. "I gave them my Sabbaths to be a sign between me and them." The institution of the Sabbath was a sign of God's good-will to them, and their observance of it a sign of their regard to him; "that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them." By this God made it to appear that he had distinguished them from the rest of the world, and designed to model them for a peculiar people to himself; and by their attendance on God in solemn assemblies on Sabbath-days, they were made to increase in the knowledge of God, in an experimental knowledge of the powers and pleasures of his sanctifying grace. Note, 1. Sabbaths are privileges, and are so to be accounted; the church acknowledges it as a great favour, in that chapter which is parallel to this, and seems to have a reference to this, Neh. ix. 14, "Thou madest known unto them thy holy Sabbaths." 2. Sabbaths are signs; it is a sign that men have a sense of religion, and that there is some good correspondence between them and God, while they make conscience of keeping holy the Sabbath-day. 3. Sabbaths, if duly sanctified, are the means of our sanctification; if we do the duty of the day, we shall find, to our comfort, "it is the Lord that sanctifies us," makes us holy, that is, truly happy, here, and prepares us to be happy, that is, perfectly holy, hereafter.

SIN ITS OWN PUNISHMENT.—Ver. 26. Spiritual judgments are the most dreadful; and these God punished them with; the statutes and judgments which the heathen observed in the worship of their idols, were "not good," and in practising them they "could not live;" and God "gave them" up to those; he made their sin to be their punishment; gave them up to a "reprobate mind" as he did the Gentile idolaters, Rom. i. 24, 26, gave them up to their own hearts' lusts, Ps. lxxxi. 12, punished them for those superstitious customs which were against the written law, by giving them up to those which were against the very light and law of nature; he left them to themselves to be guilty of the most impure idolatries, as in the worship of Baal-peor; (he "polluted them," he permitted them to pollute themselves, "in their own gifts,") ver. 26, and of the most barbarous idolatries, as in the worship of Moloch, when they "caused their children," especially their first-born, (which God challenged a particular property in, "the first-born of thy sons shalt thou give unto me,") to pass "through the fire," to be sacrificed to their idols; that thus he might "make them desolate," not only that he might justly do it, but that he might do it by their own hands; for this must needs be a great weakening to their families, and a diminution of the honour and strength of their country. Note, God sometimes makes sin to be its own punishment, and yet is not the author of sin; and there needs no more to make men miserable than to give them up to their own vile appetites and passions. Let them be put into the hand of their own counsels, and they will ruin themselves, and "make themselves desolate."

FINAL DELIVERANCE TO THE PEOPLE.—Ver. 33—40. 1. God will "gather them" in mercy "out of the countries whither they were scattered," to be monuments of mercy, as the incorrigible were gathered to be vessels of wrath. Not one of God's jewels shall be lost in the lumber of this world. 2. He will "bring them to the land of Israel," which he had promised to "give to their fathers;" and the discontinuance of their possession shall be no defeasance of their right; it is the "land of Israel" still, and thither God will bring them safe again. 3. He will re-establish his ordinances among them, will set up his sanctuary in his "holy mountain," which is here called "the mountain of the height of Israel," for though the mount Zion was none of the highest mountains, yet the temple there was one of the highest honours of Israel. It is promised, that they who preserved their integrity, and would not serve idols in other lands, shall return to their prosperity, and shall serve the true God in their own land; "all of them in the land shall serve me." Note, It is the true happiness of a people, and a sure token for good to them, when there is a prevailing disposition in them to serve God. Whereas God had forbidden the idolaters to bring their gifts to his altar, of these he will "require offerings and first-fruits," and will accept them. What he does not require he will not accept, but what is done with a regard to his precepts he will be well-pleased with. He will "accept them with their sweet savour," or "savour of rest," as being very grateful to him, and what he takes a complacency in; whereas, to hypocritical worshippers, he says, "I will not smell in your solemn assemblies." 4. He will give them true repentance for their sins, ver. 43. When they find how gracious God is to them, they will be overcome with his kindness, and blush to think of their bad behaviour toward so good a God; "there, 'in my holy mountain,' when you come to enjoy the privileges of that again, 'there' shall ye 'remember your doings' wherein ye have been defiled." Note, The more conversant we are with God's holiness, the more we shall see of the odious nature of sin. There "ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight." Note, Ingenuous evangelical repentance makes people loathe themselves for their sins.—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. SIGHING OF THE PROPHET.—Ver. 6, 7. To give these awful predictions the greater emphasis, the prophet was ordered to sigh deeply and frequently in the presence of the elders, or of the captive Jews; as if his heart would break, or his loins were racked with pain, like the anguish of a woman in travail: (as afterwards he was ordered to cry and howl for the same reason.) And when the people inquired of him the cause

18 ¶ The word of the LORD came unto me again, saying,

19 Also, thou son of man, appoint thee two ways, that the sword of the king of Babylon may come: both twain shall come forth out of one land: and choose thou a place, choose it at the head of the way to the city.

20 Appoint a way, that the sword may come to [r]Rabbath of the Ammonites, and to Judah in Jerusalem the defenced.

21 For the king of Babylon stood at the parting of the way, at the [s]head of the two ways, to use the divination: he made his [t]arrows bright, he consulted with [u]images, [x]he looked in the liver.[5]

22 At his right hand was the divination for Jerusalem, to appoint [†]captains, to open the mouth in the slaughter, to lift up the voice with shouting, to appoint battering-rams against the gates, to cast a mount, and to build a fort.

23 And it shall be unto them as a false divination in their sight, [‡]to them that have sworn oaths: but he will [b]call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken.

24 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye have made your iniquity to be remembered, in that [c]your transgressions are discovered, so that in all your doings your sins do appear; because, I say, that ye are come to remembrance, ye shall be taken with the hand.

25 ¶ And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end;

26 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: [h]exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

27 [§]I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no more, [i]until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

28 ¶ And thou, son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach; [6] even say thou, The sword, the sword is drawn: for the slaughter it is furbished, to consume because of the glittering:

29 Whiles they see vanity unto thee, whiles they divine a lie unto thee, to bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain, of the wicked, [•]whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end,

30 [l]Shall I cause it to return into his sheath? I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity.

AUGURY.—Ver. 19—22. This represents the conduct of Nebuchadnezzar. For that prince would march his army from Babylon, intending to destroy both Rabbath and Jerusalem, but undetermined which he should first attack; so that when he came to the parting of the roads, neither his policy nor his resentment would decide the matter; but he had recourse to divination. This was an appeal to some superior power to determine for him; conducted with many superstitious and idolatrous rites. Three kinds of augury or divination seems to have been used on this occasion. "They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities they intended to assault; and then putting them all together promiscuously in a quiver, they drew them out thence as lots are drawn; and that city whose name was writ on the arrow first drawn, was the city they first made war upon." [Jerom in Lowth.] "He mingled his arrows." The teraphim, or little images that were carried with them, were consulted as oracles: some artificial answer was supposed to be returned by them: and, having offered sacrifices, the priests or augurs examined the intestines, especially the liver; from the state of which, in different animals, whether mutilated or complete, sound or unsound, or from its colour, they decided, according to the rules laid down among them. The Lord, however, so overruled it, that all these inquiries concurred in determining Nebuchadnezzar to march against Jerusalem, rather than Rabbath. And when this was settled, he appointed captains, and prepared every thing for the siege of that city.—Scott.

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM.—Ver. 27. Attempts to re-establish the government would be blasted, and come to nothing; Gedaliah's particularly, and Ishmael's, who was "of the seed-royal," (to which the Chaldee paraphrase refers this,) neither of them shall be able to make any thing of it. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn," first one project, and then another; for who can build up what God will throw down? This monarchy shall never be restored, till it is fixed for perpetuity in the hands of the Messiah. There "shall be no more" kings of the house of David after Zedekiah, till Christ comes, "whose right the kingdom is," who is that Seed of David in whom the promise was to have its full accomplishment, and "I will give it him." He shall have "the throne of his father David," Luke i. 32. Immediately before the coming of Christ there was a long eclipse of the royal dignity, as there was also a failing of the spirit of prophecy, that his shining forth in the fulness of time both as King and Prophet might appear the more illustrious. Note, Christ has an incontestable title to the dominion and sovereignty both in the church and in the world; the kingdom is "right."—Henry.

10 In thee have they discovered their father's nakedness; in thee have they humbled her that was set apart for pollution.

11 And [t]one hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and [t]another hath [l]lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law; and another in thee hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter.

12 In thee have they [x]taken gifts to shed blood; [y]thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast [z]greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, [a]and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord GOD.[2]

13 Behold, therefore [b]I have smitten mine hand at [c]thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, [d]and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14 Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? [f]I the LORD have spoken it, and will do it.

15 And I will [g]scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries, and will consume thy filthiness out of thee.

16 And thou shalt [‡]take thine inheritance in thyself in the sight of the heathen, and [‡]thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

17 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross:[3] all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace; they are even the *dross of silver.

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore [n]I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.

20 [†]As they gather silver, and brass, and iron, and lead, and tin, into the midst of the furnace, to blow the fire upon it, to melt it; so will I gather you [p]in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you.

21 Yea, I will gather you, [q]and blow upon you in the fire of my wrath, [r]and ye shall be melted in the midst thereof.

22 As silver is melted in the midst of the furnace, so shall ye be melted in the midst thereof; and [s]ye shall know that I the LORD have poured out my fury upon you.

23 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, say unto her, [t]Thou art the land that is not cleansed, nor rained upon in the day of indignation.

25 There is a conspiracy of her prophets[4] in the midst thereof, like a roaring lion ravening the prey: they have devoured souls; they have taken the treasure and precious things; [y]they have made her many widows in the midst thereof.

26 Her [z]priests have [§]violated my law, and have [a]profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have [c]hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and [d]I am profaned among them.

27 Her princes in the midst thereof are like wolves ravening the prey, to shed blood, and to destroy souls, to get dishonest gain.

28 And her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar,[5] seeing vanity, and divining lies unto them, saying, Thus saith the Lord GOD, when the LORD hath not spoken.

CHAP. XXII. CATALOGUE OF SINS.—Ver. 1—16. Let us take a view of all the particular sins which Jerusalem here stands charged with; and they are all exceeding sinful. 1. Murder; "The city sheds blood," not only in the suburbs, where the strangers dwell, but "in the midst of it," where, one would think, the magistrates would, if anywhere, be vigilant. Even there people were murdered either in duels or by secret assassinations or poisonings, or in the courts of justice under colour of law, and there was no care taken to discover and punish the murderers, according to the law, Gen. ix. 6, no, nor so much as the ceremony used to expiate an uncertain murder, Deut. xxi. 1, and so the guilt and pollution remains upon the city. Thus "thou" art "become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed." This crime is insisted most upon, for it was Jerusalem's measure-filling sin more than any other; it is said to be that "which the Lord would not pardon," 2 Kings xxiv. 4. 2. Idolatry; "She makes idols against herself to destroy herself." And again, "Thou hast defiled thyself in thine idols which thou hast made." 3. Disobedience to parents; "In thee have" the children "set light by their father and mother," mocked them, cursed them, and despised to obey them, which was a sign of a more than ordinary corruption of nature as well as manners, and a disposition to all manner of disorder, Isa. iii. 5. They that set light by their parents, are in the highway to all wickedness. 4. Oppression and extortion. To enrich themselves, they wronged the poor; "They dealt by oppression" and "deceit with the stranger," taking advantage of his necessities, and his ignorance of the laws and customs of the country. 5. Profanation of the Sabbath and other holy things. This commonly goes along with the other sins for which they here stand indicted. "Thou hast despised mine holy things," holy oracles, holy ordinances; the rites which God appointed were thought too plain, too ordinary, they despised them, and therefore were fond of the customs of the heathen. Note, Immorality and dishonesty are commonly attended with a contempt of religion and the worship of God; "Thou hast profaned my Sabbaths." There was not in Jerusalem that face of Sabbath-sanctification that one would have expected in the "holy city." Sabbath-breaking is an iniquity that is an inlet to all iniquity. Many have owned it to contribute as much to their ruin as any thing. 6. Uncleanness and all manner of seventh-commandment sins, fruits of those vile affections to which God in a way of righteous judgment gives men up, to punish them for their idolatry and profanation of holy things. Jerusalem had been famous for its purity, but now "in the midst of thee they commit lewdness;" it goes barefaced, though in the most scandalous instances, as that of a man's having his father's wife, which is the "discovery of the father's nakedness," and is a sin not "to be named among Christians" without the utmost detestation, 1 Cor. v. 1, and was made a capital crime by the law of Moses, Lev. xx. 11. 7. Unmindfulness of God was at the bottom of all this wickedness; "Thou hast forgotten me,' else thou wouldst not have done thus." Note, Sinners do that which provokes God, because they "forget" him; they forget their descent from him, dependence on him, and obligations to him; they forget how valuable his favour is, which they make themselves unfit for.—Henry.

AWFUL DEGENERACY.—Ver. 18—22. Israel, compared with other nations, had been as the gold and silver compared with the baser metals. But they were now become as the dross or scum of silver, the refuse that is consumed in the furnace, or thrown away, when the silver is refined. Or they were become as brass, tin, iron, and lead, or a mixture of such metals as are comparatively of small value. These may mean different characters among them, all far beneath what Israelites ought to have been, and at best only equal to the heathen. The Lord intended therefore to gather them into Jerusalem, as metals are cast into the furnace; to make the fire exceedingly hot under them by blowing it; and to leave them there to be melted and proved; that if there were any gold or silver it might be separated and refined, and that the dross and base metal might be consumed. The wrath of God kindled and blew this fire, which consisted of the judgments inflicted on the Jews by the Chaldeans; by whom Jerusalem was entirely destroyed, and all orders and characters of men were either slain or reduced to a wretched captivity.—The destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the long-continued calamities of the Jews since that event, seem also to have been intended by the Spirit of prophecy, though the Chaldean invasion was primarily foretold.

UNIVERSAL APOSTACY.—Ver. 26. The whole company of the priests were become like Hophni and Phinehas: they wrested the law of God from its true meaning, that it might seem to sanction their enormities; or they contemptuously broke it for their own ungodly gain! They profaned the temple by their crimes; where the sacrifices and oblations were offered, or used by them, in a most unholy manner. They disregarded the distinction between holy and profane, and betwixt clean and unclean, both in respect of times, meats, persons, and actions; making every thing bend to their interest. They connived at, and joined in, the profanation of the Sabbaths; and their sacred function was so disgraced by their crimes, that the name of God was greatly profaned by them. Ver. 27, 28. The prophets employed all their ingenuity to varnish over the crimes of the princes, who were like ravening wolves, and took bribes to shed innocent blood. By these means the prophets shared the dishonest gain with the princes, or availed themselves of their authority to gratify their avarice or revenge. And thus from them robbery and oppression were diffused through the land. Ver. 30. Jeremiah, and some few others, endeavoured to bring the people to repentance, and to 13 Then I saw that she was defiled, [s]that they took both one way;

14 And that she increased her whoredoms: for when she saw men [t]pourtrayed upon the wall,[4] the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with [u]vermilion,

15 Girded [x]with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, [y]all of them princes to look to, after the manner of the Babylonians of Chaldea, the land of their nativity.

16 And [z]as soon as she saw them with her eyes, she doted upon them, [a]and sent messengers unto them into Chaldea.

17 And the [5]Babylonians came to her into the bed of love, and they defiled her with their whoredom, and she was polluted with them; [b]and her mind was [1]alienated from them.

18 So she [c]discovered her whoredoms, and discovered her nakedness; then [d]my mind was alienated from her, like as my mind was alienated from her sister.

19 Yet she [e]multiplied her whoredoms, [f]in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20 For she doted upon their [g]paramours,[5] whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus thou calledst to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy teats by the Egyptians for the paps of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [h]I will raise up thy lovers against thee, [i]from whom thy mind is alienated, [k]and I will bring them against thee on every side.

23 The [k]Babylonians, and all [l]the Chaldeans, [m]Pekod, and Shoa, and Koa,[6] and all [n]the Assyrians with them: all of them [o]desirable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee [p]with chariots, waggons, and wheels, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler, and shield, and helmet round about: and [q]I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge thee according to their judgments.

25 And [r]I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: [s]they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and [t]thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

26 They shall also [u]strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy [*]fair jewels.

But, (as some have observed,) therefore, at that time, when Satan boasted of his having "walked through the earth" as all his own, to disprove his pretensions, God did not say, Hast thou considered "my people Israel in Egypt?" (For they were become idolaters, and were not to be boasted of;) but "Hast thou considered my servant Job in the land of Uz?" And this corrupt disposition in them, when they were first formed into a people, is an emblem of that original corruption which is born with us, and is woven into our constitution, a strong bias toward the world and flesh, like that in the Israelites toward idolatry; it was "bred in the bone" with them, and was charged upon them long after, that they "left not their whoredoms brought from Egypt;" it would never "out of the flesh," though Egypt had been a house of bondage to them; thus the corrupt affections and inclinations which we brought into the world with us, we have not lost, nor got clear of, but still retain them, though the iniquity we were born in was the source of all the calamities which human life is liable to.—Henry.

Aholibah.—Ver. 11—21. All the time that the kingdom of Israel was ripening for judgments, and even after it was ruined, Judah was growing more and more corrupt, and devoted to idols: and in the reign of Ahaz, afterwards in that of Manasseh and Amon, and at last after the death of Josiah, the Jews were more mad upon their idols than the Israelites had been; so that the efforts of their pious princes to reform them, only tended to show the inveteracy of the disease, which increased amidst the most powerful remedies used to abate it. They too connected themselves with the Assyrians, and were enamoured of them and their idols; and then with the Chaldeans, and followed their idols; still retaining also their attachment to the Egyptians and their idols. Thus they were like those abandoned women, who have cast off all regard to decency, duty, or consequences: and are given up in the most infatuated manner to their unbridled inordinate passions, and are ready to prostitute themselves to every man they see: and their conduct was represented by these allusions, to show how loathsome and hateful idolatry is in the sight of God. But after a short time they were as much alienated from the Chaldeans, as they had been attached to them; (as is frequently the case between bad women and their paramours:) and this made way for their tempters to become their executioners. For though they were alienated from the Chaldeans, they continued to provoke the Lord by their vile idolatries and heathen alliances, especially with the Egyptians; so that he was at length entirely alienated from them.—Scott.

Increasing Sin.—Ver. 38. Every contempt put upon that which is holy, reflects upon him who is the fountain of holiness, and from a relation to whom whatever is called "holy" has its denomination. God had set up "his sanctuary" among them, but they "defiled it," by making it a house of merchandize, a den of thieves; nay, and much 29 And they shall [a]deal with thee hatefully, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare; and [b]the nakedness of thy whoredoms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, because [c]thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and [d]because thou art polluted with their idols;

31 Thou hast [e]walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give [f]her cup into thine hand.[g]

32 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Thou shalt [g]drink of thy sister's cup deep and large: [h]thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much.

33 Thou shalt be [i]filled with drunkenness and sorrow, [k]with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.

34 Thou shalt even [l]drink it, and suck it out, and thou shalt break the sherds thereof, [m]and pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

35 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [n]Because thou hast forgotten me, [o]and cast me behind thy back, [p]therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoredoms.

36 ¶ The LORD said moreover unto me, Son of man, [q]wilt thou [r]judge [s]Aholah and Aholibah? yea, [t]declare unto them their abominations;

37 That [u]they have committed adultery, [v]and blood is in their hands,[8] and with their idols have they committed adultery; and [w]have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover, this they have done unto me: [x]they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, [y]and have profaned my sabbaths.

39 For when they had slain their children to their idols, then [z]they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, [a]thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

40 And furthermore, that [b]ye have sent for men [c]to come from far, unto whom a messenger was sent;[9] and, lo, they came: for whom [d]thou didst wash thyself, [e]paintedst thine eyes, and [f]deckedst thyself with ornaments,

41 And sattest upon a [g]stately bed, and [h]a table prepared before it, [i]whereupon thou hast set mine incense and mine oil.

CHAP. XXIV.

By a boiling pot, 1, is shewed Jerusalem's destruction, 6. By Ezekiel's not mourning for his wife, 15, is shewed the Jews' calamity to be beyond all sorrow, 19.

AGAIN, in the [a]ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day: the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day.

3 And [d]utter a parable unto [e]the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it:[1]

4 Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

5 Take the choice of the flock, and [*]burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them seethe the bones of it therein.

6 ¶ Wherefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [k]Woe to the bloody city, to the pot whose scum is therein, and whose scum is not gone out of it! bring it out piece by piece; let no lot fall upon it.

7 For [e]her blood is in the midst of her;

worse, there they set up their idols, and worshipped them, and there they shed the blood of God's prophets. God had "revealed to them his holy sabbaths," but they "profaned" them, by doing all manner of servile work therein, or perhaps by sports and recreations on that day, not only practised, but allowed and encouraged, by authority. They "defiled the sanctuary," on "the same day" that they "profaned the Sabbath." To defile the sanctuary was bad enough on any day, but to do it on the Sabbath-day was an aggravation. We commonly say, the better day, the better deed; but here, the better day, the worse deed. God takes notice of the circumstances of sin, which add to the guilt. He shows, ver. 39, what was their profanation, both of the sanctuary and of the Sabbath. "They slew their children," and sacrificed them "to their idols," to the great dishonour both of God and of the human nature; and then came, the same day, their hands imbrued with the blood of their children, and their clothes stained with it, to attend in "God's sanctuary;" not to ask pardon for what they had done, but to present themselves before him, as other Israelites did, expecting acceptance with him, notwithstanding these villanies which they were guilty of; as if God either did not know their wickedness, or did not hate it. Thus they "profaned the sanctuary," as if that were a protection to the worst of malefactors; for thus they did "in the midst of his house." Note, It is a profanation of God's solemn ordinances, when those that are grossly and openly profane and vicious, impudently and impenitently so intrude upon the services and privileges of them. "Give not that which is holy unto dogs. Friend, how camest thou in hither?"

PUNISHMENT.—Ver. 45. "The righteous men, they shall judge them." Some make the instruments of their destruction to be the "righteous men" that "shall judge them." The Assyrians that destroyed Samaria, the Chaldeans that destroyed Jerusalem, those were comparatively "righteous," had a sense of justice between man and man, and "justly" resented the treachery of the Jewish nation; however, they executed God's judgments, which, we are sure, are all "righteous." Others understand it of the prophets, whose office it was, in God's name, to "judge" them, and pass sentence upon them. This judgment being given by "the righteous men," the "righteous God" will award execution. See here, 1. What the execution will be, ver. 46, 47. The same as before, ver. 23, &c. God will "bring a company" of enemies "upon them," who shall be made to serve his holy purposes, even then when they are serving their own sinful appetites and passions. These enemies shall easily prevail, for God will "give them" into their hands "to be removed and spoiled;" this company shall "stone them with stones" as malefactors; shall "single them out," and "despatch them with their swords;" and, as was sometimes done in severe executions, (witness that of Achan,) they shall "slay their children, and burn their houses." 2. What will be the effects of it. (1.) Thus they shall suffer for their sins; Their "lewdness shall be recompensed upon them," ver. 49; and they shall "bear the sins of their idols," ver. 35, 49. Thus God will assert the honour of his broken law and injured government, and let the world know what a just and jealous God he is. (2.) Thus they shall be broken off from their sins; "I will cause lewdness to cease out of the land, ver. 27, 48. The destruction of God's city, like the death of God's saints, shall do that for them which ordinances and providences before could not do, it shall quite take away their sin; so that Jerusalem shall rise out of its ashes a new lump, as gold comes out of the furnace, purified from its dross. (3.) Thus other cities and nations will have fair warning given them to keep themselves from idols; that "all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness." This is the end of the punishment of malefactors, that they may be made examples to others, who will "see and fear. Smite the scorner, and the simple will beware." The judgments of God upon some are designed to "teach others," and happy they who receive instruction from them, not to tread in the steps of sinners, lest they be taken in their snares; those who would be taught this, must "know God is the Lord," (ver. 49, that he is the Governor of the world,) a God that judges in the earth, and with whom there is "no respect of persons."—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. PROPHETIC PICTURE OF THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 1, 2. The prophet resided many hundred miles from Jerusalem; yet on the very day when the siege of that city was formed, the Lord revealed it to him, and ordered him to make such a memorial of it, as would afterwards give authority to his word, that it was in truth the word of God. Ver. 3—5. To represent to the rebellious Jews the certain event of the siege, the prophet was ordered to speak a parable to them. For the Lord gave repeated orders, (as in haste to be obeyed,) to set on a pot, and pour water into it. Into this they were directed to gather the pieces of an animal, or of several animals, the choice of the flock; especially the choice pieces and bones. This represented Jerusalem besieged by the Chaldeans: all ranks of men were gathered into it, by taking refuge within the walls, especially the nobles and princes; and thus they were retained in the city to their destruction.—"And this parable, though they seem resolved not to take heed to what thou deliverest, either in plain words or in figurative expressions.—'Burn also the bones,' &c. The bones of those who had been unjustly slain in the midst of the city, chap. xi. 6, 7, whose blood cries for vengeance against it, and kindles God's anger like fire." [Lowth.] Ver. 6—8. Jerusalem, that bloody city, was the pot, and the wickedness committed in it the scum. The judgments of God upon the Jews caused this scum to arise, by exciting

God's vengeance on the Ammonites declared for their malevolence to the Jews, 1, upon Moab and Seir, 8, upon Edom, 12, and upon the Philistines, 15.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [a]set thy face against [b]the Ammonites, and prophesy against them;

3 And say unto the Ammonites,[1] Hear the word of the Lord GOD; Thus saith the Lord GOD, Because [c]thou saidst, Aha, against my sanctuary, when it was profaned; and against the land of Israel, when it was desolate; and against the house of Judah, when they went into captivity;

4 Behold, therefore I will deliver thee to the [*]men [d]of the east[2] for a possession, and they shall set their palaces in thee, and make their dwellings in thee: [e]they shall eat thy fruit, and they shall drink thy milk.

5 And I will make [f]Rabbah [g]a stable for camels,[3] and the Ammonites a couching place for flocks; [h]and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

6 For thus saith the Lord GOD, Because [i]thou hast clapped thine [†]hands, and [k]stamped with the [l]feet, and [l]rejoiced in [§]heart with all thy despite against the land of Israel;

7 Behold, therefore [m]I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, [n]and will deliver thee for [‖]a spoil to the heathen; and I will cut thee off from the people, and I will cause thee to perish out of the countries: I will destroy thee; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

es with a stroke;" that is, to have been in every re-

ke, without any intervening sickness, which would aggravate the pain of this great affliction. Yet he was commanded to avoid every outward expression of sorrow: he was not allowed to shed tears, or to make any outcry, or to use any of the customary tokens of mourning: he was required to wear his turban, or bonnet, and his shoes, as usual; and not to cover his lips, the sign of silent distress. He was not allowed to eat the bread which was commonly sent on such occasions to the mourners by their friends, as supposing their minds too full of perturbation to make provision for themselves; and perhaps consisting of such things as were deemed to correspond with their afflicted state, or suited to minister to their comfort. Accordingly, by the grace of God, he was enabled to acquiesce in the Divine will, in this trying dispensation; and after having received this distressing information, he went to speak to the people, and to notify to them the affliction that was coming upon him, and the manner in which he was ordered to behave under it. For at even his wife died, and the next morning he was enabled openly to conform his conduct to the Divine command, though it would probably expose him to the censure of being insensible, and devoid of tender affections. Some of the people would inquire the prophet's meaning, in derision or censoriousness; but others would suppose that he thus intended to fix their attention on his instructions: and their inquiry gave him an opportunity of delivering the message of God to them.—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. DESTRUCTION OF THE NEIGHBOURING ENEMIES OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 3—7. The enmity of the Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites against the Jews, seem to have originated from ancient competitions, and from covetous desires of their possessions; but it was augmented by their hatred of God and of his worship. They therefore rejoiced over the profanation and destruction of the temple, as well as over the miseries of the people and the desolation of the land; and they expressed their insulting triumph in the most indecent manner; as if they meant to encourage the Chaldeans in the work of carnage and destruction. The Lord therefore reminded them, (for it is probable, that these predictions would be sent to them or heard of by them,) that he was about to deliver them also into the hands of their enemies to be destroyed.—It is likely, that Nebuchadnezzar subjugated the Ammonites some time after the destruction of Jerusalem: that the Arabians, and other nations to the east of Judah, took possession of their cities, and enjoyed the fruit of their land; and that they made Rabbi their head-quarters, and there kept their camels and folded their flocks, of which they possessed vast multitudes.—The Ammonites have long since perished from being a distinct nation; and the performance of these predictions was suited to convince the survivors, that JEHOVAH was indeed the only living and true God.—"By the men of the east may be meant the Chaldeans.

Ammon is reckoned among the countries which God foretold, by Jeremiah, should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon." [Lowth.]—Ver. 10, 11, "To the sons of the east, with the sons of Ammon, I have even given it for a possession; in order that the sons of Ammon may no longer be remembered among the nations. And I will," &c.—The ruin of Moab would deprive the Ammonites of every resource, and be one means of their sinking into neglect and oblivion. Thus both Ammon and Moab, who were nearly related, and generally supported each other, would be desolated together by the same powerful enemies. Ver. 14. "By the hand," &c. Judas Maccabæus, and afterwards Hyrcanus, vanquished the Edomites, and at length reduced them entirely into subjection to the Jews: and thus that revengeful nation was made to know the vengeance of God, by the hand of his people Israel. Ver. 15. The Philistines were a remnant of the old inhabitants of Canaan; and from the days of Joshua they had hated Israel, and had been for ages very formidable enemies: but having been at length reduced, they were not able to express their hatred, till the Jews were subdued by the Chaldeans; and then they assisted them to cut off the fugitives. Ver. 16. "Cherethims," &c. Either the Cherethims were a tribe of the ancient Canaanites, bordering on the Philistines; or this is merely another name, by which the Philistines were known. "The remnant" seems to mean the inhabitants of Ashdod, which had been almost destroyed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The hatred which ungodly men bear to true religion, is so excessive, that they can rejoice in the desolations of the church and the calamities of her children, even when ruin impends over them from the same quarter!—Though God acts with perfect wisdom and justice, in permitting the profanation of his sanctuary, and the troubles of his professed worshippers, being influenced by abhorrence of their sins, and zeal for his own glory, yet their enemies are induced by far other motives, when they triumph and insult over them in such circumstances.—They, who rejoice at the calamities of their neighbours, out of avarice, ambition, resentment, or malignity, will be exposed to judgments for it: but they that rejoice with great delight in the afflictions of God's people, out of hatred to his truth and worship, may expect that he will stretch forth his hands against them, as his personal enemies.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVI. THE DOOM OF TYRE.—Ver. 3—6. This chapter and the two following contain a very copious prophecy against Tyre, which was one of the most ancient cities in the world, and for many ages one of the most flourishing; being the centre of commerce betwixt the east and the west, and the grand emporium of the earth. Such predictions have generally been accomplished in a gradual manner: and whilst some more signal and near event was particularly foretold; they contained also expressions, which related to more remote futurity. It had been foretold by Isaiah, that Tyre, after having been destroyed by the Chaldeans, would at length recover her prosperity, and that the Tyrians would be converted to Christianity. The total and final ruin of that city could not be effected, till those prophecies had been fulfilled; yet that also was clearly predicted, and has accordingly been exactly accomplished. We may therefore interpret these verses as a summary prediction of those events which would take place, during a long succession of ages; and thus we at this day, possess a fuller demonstration, that Ezekiel wrote by divine inspiration, than his contemporaries had; for what man could have thought of so entire a destruction of such a flourishing city, as is here predicted, and has accordingly happened?—The Lord, being against Tyre, declared that he would cause several nations to come up against her. This may mean the Chaldean army, composed of troops from several nations; but it seems rather to intend the Chaldeans, Macedoneans, and other nations, who successively weakened, and have at length totally desolated Tyre. These would bear down all before them, like an inundation of the sea: and not only destroy her walls and towers; but even reduce the ground, on which the city stood, to a bare and barren rock, a place for the spreading of nets, like some rocks found in the midst of the seas. The spoil and trade of Tyre would also be divided among many nations; and the dependent towns and villages, in the adjacent country, would fall before her by the sword of the conquerors.—Scott.

CONSTERNATION AT THE FALL OF TYRE.—Ver. 15—21. See what a consternation all the neighbours are in, upon the fall of Tyre. This is elegantly expressed here, to show how astonishing it should be. 1. "The islands" shall "shake at the sound of thy fall," ver. 15. As when a great merchant breaks, all that he deals with are shocked by it, and begin to look about them; perhaps they had effects in his hands, which they are afraid they shall lose. Or, when they see one fail and become bankrupt of a sudden, in debt a great deal more than he is worth, it makes them afraid for themselves, lest they should do so too. Thus "the isles," which thought themselves safe in the embraces of the sea, when they see Tyrus fall, shall "tremble," and "be troubled," saying, "What will become of us?" And it is well if they make this good use of it, to take warning by it not to be secure, but to stand in awe of God and his judgments. The sudden fall of a great tower shakes the ground round about it; thus all the islands in the Mediterranean sea shall feel themselves sensibly touched by the destruction of Tyre, it being a place they had so much knowledge of, such interest in, and such a correspondence with. 2. The "princes of the sea" shall be affected with it, who ruled in those islands; or, the rich merchants, who live like princes, Isa. xxiii. 8, and the masters of ships, who command like princes, these shall condole the fall of Tyre, in a most compassionate and s when made to the

Tyrians, or that artificers came to Tyre to manufacture them. But it does not appear how the Assyrians could be said to make these benches; and the clause is rendered by some, of box-wood inlaid with ivory. The fine linen of Egypt, (which was renowned throughout the world,) and richly embroidered too, was used by the Tyrians for their flags or colours, as the original may be rendered; for it can scarcely be conceived that their sails were generally formed of such rich materials; though such extravagance might occasionally be used in an ostentatious display of wealth and magnificence. Their clothes, or the tents and canopies upon the decks of their galleys, were formed of cloth of blue and purple from the isles of the Egean sea, or the Grecian colonies near the coast of Asia Minor. Purple was called the Tyrian colour: yet they were not contented with their own manufactures, but luxuriously used that which was brought from far and at a great price. They had mariners from Zidon, the mother-city, and from Arvad, an island in Phenicia, who did the laborious work on board their ships; whilst the Tyrians, being very skilful in navigation, acted only as pilots, or occupied the more honourable departments. Ver. 13—25. We have here a particular account of the nations or cities, that traded with Tyre, and the commodities which they brought to her markets. Thus Tarshish, or Tartessus in Spain, (as it is supposed) exchanged various metals, (which were either the produce of that country or fetched from others,) for the rich luxuries of the eastern world. It is probable that the tin was brought from Britain, (out of Cornwall,) which was first known to the ancients, as yielding great quantities of that metal.—The different parts of Greece, or the regions about the Euxine and Caspian seas, sold slaves and vessels of brass to the Tyrians. Vogarmah, or Phrygia, Cappadocia, or some of the regions in Asia Minor, supplied them with horses and mules, and with servants skilful in managing them. The inhabitants of Dedan, supposed to be in Arabia, traded with them; and many isles or countries of Europe, bought of the Tyrians the goods which they brought them; especially their horns of ivory, or rather, horns, ivory, and ebony, i.e. the horns of some curious animals; ivory which is the teeth of elephants, and ebony a very hard and valuable wood. These they brought for a present to the Tyrians, or rather as the price of the goods which they purchased.—"Many isles bought the merchandise of thy hand," &c. The Syrians bought the manufactures, which the Tyrians made in abundance, and paid for them with precious stones and other articles of luxury. The land of Judah and Israel had no precious stones or metals to exchange, (though it was the glory of all lands,) but it supplied them with what was more valuable, namely abundance of good wheat, honey, oil, and balm used in medicine: (it is uncertain whether Pannag be the name of a place, or of some valued production of Canaan.)—Damascus changed the wine of Helbon, and white wool, which were both in great repute, for the

God's judgment upon the prince of Tyrus for his impious pride, 1. The judgment of Zidon, &c., 20.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [a]Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, [b]I am a god, [c]I sit in the seat of God, [d]in the *midst of the seas; [e]yet thou art a man, and not God, though [f]thou set thine heart as the heart of God:

3 Behold, [g]thou art wiser than Daniel;[1] there is [h]no secret that they can hide from thee:

4 With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:

5 By †thy great wisdom, and by thy traffick, hast thou increased thy riches, [i]and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches:

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [m]Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God;[2]

7 Behold, therefore [n]I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations; and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.

8 They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that [p]are slain in the midst of the seas.

9 Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but [t]thou shalt be a man, and no god, in the hand of him that ‡slayeth thee.

10 Thou shalt die [x]the deaths of the uncircumcised [z]by the hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord GOD.

11 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

12 Son of man, take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Thou sealest up the sum, [a]full of wisdom, and perfect in beauty.

13 Thou hast been [b]in Eden the garden of God; every precious stone was thy covering, the *sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the †beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the ‡emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold: the workmanship of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in thee in the day that [c]thou wast created.

14 Thou art [f]the anointed cherub that covereth;[3] and I have set thee so: thou wast [h]upon the holy mountain of God; thou hast walked up and down in the midst of [i]the stones of fire.

15 Thou wast [k]perfect in thy ways from the day that thou wast created, [l]till iniquity was found in thee.

16 By the multitude of thy merchandise they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned: [o]therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God; and I will destroy thee, [p]O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire.

17 Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty; thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness:[4] [s]I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings, that they may behold thee.

18 Thou hast [u]defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thine iniquities, by the iniquity of thy traffick; therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee, it shall devour thee; and I will bring thee to ashes upon the earth in the sight of all them that behold thee.

19 All they that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: [x]thou shalt be a *terror, and never shalt thou be any more.

20 ¶ Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, set thy face against Zidon,[5] and prophesy against it,

22 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD,

[3] The prophet describes the prince of Tyre by images taken from the temple. The cherubs were a part of the ark, and therefore anointed, Ex. xxv. 18, 21; xxx. 26. Their wings covered the mercy-seat. The prophet pursues the image. Such was thy eminence, that thou wast placed like the cherubs in the temple of God, on his holy mountain, and dwelt as if amid the splendours of the high-priest's breast-plate. Thinking himself to be more than mortal, is expressed by his being as Adam was in Paradise, or as the cherubs were in a place not to be approached.—BOOTHROYD.

[5] One of the most ancient cities of the universe, and most northern of the tribe of Asher; thought to be called after Sidon, one of the sons of Canaan, (Gen. x. 15.) It long excelled Tyre, as a great maritime city. The city was built on an inaccessible rock, strong by art and nature, and environed by the sea.—WELLS.

useful manufactures of Tyre. The inhabitants of Dan and Javan, (probably not the city Dan in the coasts of Israel, nor any part of Greece as before, but cities in the east,) brought polished iron or steel, with rich spices to Tyre, to exchange for the commodities of the western world: as another Dedan, (probably in Idumea,) did rich cloths, to ornament or line their chariots.—Some districts of Arabia supplied Tyre with cattle; others with spices, gold, and precious stones.—The inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Media, and the adjacent regions, traded with Tyre, bringing chests of all kinds of rich apparel. In short, all the ships of which sailed on the sea, and which were generally called "the ships of Tarshish," celebrated the praises of Tyre: that city was replenished with all kinds of riches, and made glorious with all earthly decorations and magnificence.—Upon a review of this account of the commerce of Tyre, it is plain that that city traded with every part of the then known world, either immediately, or through the medium of other nations. Ver. 26—36. Tyre is here poetically described as a ship at sea, and wrecked through the mismanagement of her pilots and rowers. When the rulers of Tyre provoked Nebuchadnezzar to make war upon them, and when they pertinaciously resolved to withstand that haughty conqueror, they rowed this gallant ship into perilous waters; and when the city was taken, it was "broken by the east-wind in the midst of the seas." The same was the case in the time of Alexander the Great, and in those subsequent disasters, which terminated in the total ruin of Tyre. Thus the inhabitants and riches of Tyre, like the crew and cargo of a broken ship, sunk into the midst of the seas. The cry of the leading men in Tyre, when they saw that the city must be taken; (like that of pilots, when they perceive that the ship must sink,) would be heard in the extreme parts of the city, or even on the adjacent continent. All the rowers and mariners of the ships that had used to trade to Tyre, would come on shore to witness the fatal catastrophe, and would express their extreme sorrow by every significant token; and with great astonishment and deep regret contrast the former prosperity of Tyre, when kings and nations were enriched by her, with her present condition, now that she was utterly broken and ruined.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. PRIDE OF TYRE.—Ver. 2—5. Ethbaal, or Ithobalus, was the prince or king of Tyre at the time when this prophecy was spoken, and when the city was taken by Nebuchadnezzar. He seems to have been a man of eminent abilities, and under his government the Tyrians for a time prospered exceedingly. But, being lifted up with the most excessive pride, he arrogated divine honours to himself, as many vainglorious monarchs have done. His sovereignty over the seas was so uncontrolled, and his authority was so firmly established, that he seemed to himself to reign as a god in the midst of the seas; and to be placed on the throne of God, rather than on that of a man. Yet was he a poor frail mortal man, and not God, though he affected to be absolute, independent, and honoured as a deity. Daniel, who was at this time not more than thirty-six years of age, being employed in the court of the king of Babylon, had become exceedingly renowned for his wisdom in all the concerns of government, as well as in interpreting dreams, and resolving difficult questions: but the king of Tyre supposed himself to be wiser than he, and that no secret could be hid from him. He was perhaps a man of learning, and understood many abstruse subjects; or he had discovered the secret machinations of his enemies, which he ascribed to his own discernment, and supposed that nothing could elude his penetration. But the chief use of his wisdom was to increase his revenues and treasures, by protecting the trade and wealth of his subjects. This he ascribed to his own wise counsels; and thus his riches tended in every way to enhance his pride and self-sufficiency.

SPLENDOUR OF TYRE.—Ver. 12—15. The prophet was directed to conclude the prediction against Tyre with a lamentation, or poetical elegy, over this haughty monarch; which would be the more remarkable, as he was at that time at the height of pride and prosperity. Ithobalus's opinion of his own dignity, and his ostentation of magnificence, are described in very remarkable language. He vainly thought himself to be the sum of all excellency; that his abilities, personal accomplishments, authority, and splendour comprised the fulness of wisdom and the perfection of beauty; and that they were his by an unalienable tenure, securely sealed up among his treasures. He thought his dignity as great, and his advantages as many, as those of Adam in Eden, in the garden of God. His crown was formed, and his garments decorated, with abundance of precious stones: of these nine are mentioned, which were set in gold, and were the same as nine of those that were placed in the breast-plate of the high priest, whom some think he meant to vie with in this particular. Tabrets, and other musical instruments, had been prepared for him with exquisite skill; either to celebrate his coronation, the day when he was created king, or his birth, and afterwards his birth-day as it annually returned. Perhaps he had been anointed king, according to the custom in Israel: it was his office to cover or protect his people, and for this purpose God had raised him to his throne: but he forgot his dependence on him, deemed himself able to do it by his own power, and shone in his own eyes, as an angel in heaven, or a deity. This refers to the cherubim that covered the mercy-seat, which were anointed with the holy ointment, along with the ark of the covenant, &c.; or to those, who guarded the entrance of Eden, and kept every way the tree of life. In this conceit of his own excellency, and equalling himself equal to the inhabitants of heaven, the holy mountain of God, he walked up and 14 And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cause them to return into the land of [c]Pathros, into the land of their [*]habitation; and they shall be there a [†]base kingdom.

15 It shall be [d]the basest[5] of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more [e]rule over the nations.

16 And it shall be no more [f]the confidence of the house of Israel, which [g]bringeth their iniquity to remembrance,[6] when they shall look after them: [h]but they shall know that I am the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ And it came to pass in [i]the seven and twentieth year, in the first month, and the first day of the month, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, [k]Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled;[7] yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [l]I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and [‡]take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army.

they were the sole proprietors, and placed there to devour all the rest. Such was Pharaoh-hophra: he was a man of a very haughty, tyrannical, and cruel disposition; and having prospered for several years, he grew exceedingly arrogant; and, as Herodotus informs us, he boasted "that no god could deprive him of his kingdom." This impiety was as absurd as if the crocodile should think that the river was his own, and that he made it for himself. But the Lord was able to deal with this unruly monster, who lay fearless in his rivers, and set all the universe at defiance: he meant to destroy him and his forces, as if he had dragged the crocodile forth with a hook, and all the fish of the river had stuck to his scales, and they had been all cast together upon a dry and desert place, to be devoured by the wild beasts and the birds of prey.—Bochart observes, that the word Pharaoh signifies a crocodile, in Arabic. The Egyptians, in process of time, wearied with the tyranny and cruelty of Hophra, revolted from him, and under Amasis they routed and destroyed his army, and all that adhered to him; at length he too fell into the conqueror's hands, and was strangled by him; and thus Amasis succeeded to the throne, after Egypt had suffered most dreadful miseries by these intestine dissensions.

DOOM OF EGYPT.—Ver. 8—13. The preceding figurative prediction related principally to the king of Egypt; what follows chiefly respected the nation: that foretold the ruin of Hophra and his party by civil wars; this relates to the desolations occasioned by the victorious arms of Nebuchadnezzar, some years after. It is probable that the people had approved of the proud and imperious language of their king, and so were punished as accomplices in his crime.—The Lord caused Nebuchadnezzar to invade Egypt, and gave him such success, that he put a stop to their commerce and intercourse with their neighbours, and to their agriculture and journeying, and even reduced the country to a desert "from 'the tower of Syene,' or rather 'from Migdol to Syene,' 'even to the borders of Ethiopia;'" from the entrance into Egypt out of Asia, to Ethiopia, from one end of the land to the other. History informs us that Nebuchadnezzar conquered Egypt, and, carrying multitudes of prisoners thence, dispersed them in different parts of his dominions; and doubtless numbers perished or took shelter in other nations at the same time. But we are not sufficiently informed of the transactions of those ages, to show the exact fulfilment of this part of the prophecy, as it hath been done in other instances. It was however predicted that the land would continue desolate, and the inhabitants dispersed, till forty years were expired; the end of which term nearly coincided with the ruin of the Babylonish monarchy; and it is probable that Cyrus permitted the captive Egyptians to return and re-people their own land, as well as the captive Jews.

EGYPT THE BASEST OF NATIONS.—Ver. 14, 15. From a few years after the time that this prophecy was delivered, to the present day, Egypt has been governed by foreigners,

CHAP. XXX.

The desolation of Egypt and her helpers, 1. The arm of Babylon shall be strengthened to break the arm of Egypt, 20.

THE word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Howl ye, Woe worth the day![1]

3 For the day is near, even the day of the LORD is near, a cloudy day; it shall be [d]the time of the heathen.

4 And [e]the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great [*]pain shall be in Ethiopia, when the slain shall fall in Egypt, [f]and they shall take away her multitude, [g]and her foundations shall be broken down.

5 [h]Ethiopia, and [†]Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Chub, and the [i]men of the land [k]that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

6 Thus saith the LORD, [l]They also that uphold Egypt shall fall; and the pride of her power shall come down: [i]from the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord GOD.

7 And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted.

8 And they [n]shall know that I am the LORD, [o]when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be [l]destroyed.

9 In that day shall [p]messengers go forth from me in ships,[2] to make the [q]careless Ethiopians afraid, and [r]great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, [s]lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [t]I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon.

11 He and his people with him, [u]the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, [x]and fill the land with the slain.

12 And [y]I will make the rivers [*]dry, and [z]sell the land into the hand of the wicked; and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, [a]by the hand of strangers: I the LORD have spoken it.

13 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [b]I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of [c]Noph: and [d]there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt:[3] and I will [e]put a fear in the land of Egypt.

14 And I will make [f]Pathros desolate, and will set fire in [*]Zoan, and [g]will execute judgments in No.

15 And I [h]will pour my fury upon [†]Sin, the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No.

16 And I will [i]set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have great pain, and No shall be rent asunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily.

17 The young men of [‡]Aven and of [§]Phibeseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity.

18 At [k]Tehaphnehes[4] also [l]the day shall be [‖]darkened, when [m]I shall break there the yokes of Egypt; and [n]the pomp of her strength shall cease in her: as for her, [o]a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall go into captivity.

19 Thus [p]will I execute judgments in Egypt; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

20 ¶ And it came to pass [q]in the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, [r]I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, [s]it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword.

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [t]I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his arms, the strong, [u]and that which was broken; and [x]I will cause the sword to fall out of his hand.

23 And [y]I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

24 And [z]I will strengthen the arms[5] of the king of Babylon, [a]and put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh's arms, and [b]he shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly-wounded man.

25 But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down; and they [c]shall know that I am the LORD, when I shall put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.

26 And [d]I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries; and they shall know that I am the LORD.

and been tributary to other nations. It was long the most renowned kingdom in the world; but it had first oppressed, and then seduced and deceived the people of God; and this sentence was therefore denounced against it. After the ruin of the Babylonish monarchy, it was subdued by the Persians, and though it frequently revolted, they always recovered their dominion over it. It afterwards fell under the dominion of the Macedonians; then it became subject to the Romans, and at length a province of that empire. The Saracens next subdued it, then the Mamalucks, and lastly the Turks, to whom it remains in the most abject servitude at this day. Thus, for above two thousand years, Egypt hath continued a base and tributary kingdom, not able to exalt itself above the nations, as formerly; nor have the inhabitants, during all these ages, been permitted to live under princes of their own race. So that when at any time they have attempted to shake off the yoke, the short space during which they aimed at independence was as nothing to this long term of years: and even then they were rather unsuccessfully struggling for liberty than actually enjoying it. This is a most astonishing accomplishment of a most singular prophecy; for who could have conceived that so renowned and powerful a country should remain for such a succession of ages under subjection to foreigners?

TYRE AND EGYPT.—Ver. 17—20. Nebuchadnezzar besieged Tyre thirteen years before he took it. During the siege his soldiers had endured great hardship; their heads had been made bald by constantly wearing their helmets, and their shoulders had been peeled by carrying materials to form the works; and the king must have been at incalculable expense in the undertaking; yet when the Tyrians found that their city must fall, they sent away their most valuable effects, either to the city on the island, or to their colonies, or else they destroyed them, so that the plunder of the city was not sufficient to defray the charges of the siege, or to recompense the labours of the army. But the Lord considered Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldeans as his servants, to execute his predicted vengeance on the Tyrians; and he purposed to give them a suitable recompense. He would therefore employ them in the conquest of Egypt, which being weakened by civil wars, would be an easy prey, and abundantly enrich them with its spoil. This prophecy was a confirmation of the preceding, which had been delivered almost seventeen years before.—Scott.

CHAP. XXX. PRIDE OF EGYPT LAID LOW.—Egypt pretended to uphold Jerusalem when that was tottering, but proved a deceitful reed; and now they that pretended to uphold Egypt shall prove no better. Those that deceive others are commonly paid in their own coin, they are themselves deceived. 1. Does Egypt think herself upheld by the absolute authority and dominion of her king? The "pride of her power" shall "come down," ver. 6. The power of the king of Egypt was his "pride;" but that shall be broken and humbled. 2. Is the multitude of her people her support? These shall "fall by the sword," even "from the tower of Syene," which is in the utmost corner of the land, from that side of it by which the enemy shall enter. Both the "countries" and the "cities," the husbandmen and the merchants, shall be desolate, ver. 7, as before, chap. xxix. 12. Even "the multitude of Egypt shall be made to cease," ver. 10. That "populous" country shall be "depopulated." The land shall be even "filled with the slain," ver. 11. 3. Is the river Nile her support, and the several channels of it a defence to her? "I will make the rivers dry," ver. 12, so that those natural fortifications, which were thought impregnable, because impassable, shall stand them in no stead. 4. Are her idols a support to her? Those shall be destroyed, those imaginary upholders shall appear more than ever to be imaginary, for so images are when they pretend to be deliverers and strong-holds. Ver. 13, "I will cause their images to cease out of Noph. 5. Is her royal family her support? "There shall be no more a prince in the land of Egypt;" the royal family shall be extirpated and extinguished, which had continued so long. 6. Is her courage her support, and does she think to uphold herself by the bravery of her men of war, who have now of late been inured to service? That shall fail; I will put a fear in the land of Egypt." 7. Is the rising generation her support; is she upheld by her children, and does she think herself happy, because she has her quiver full of them? Alas! "the young men shall fall by the sword," ver. 17, and "the daughters shall go into captivity," ver. 18, and so she shall be robbed of all her hopes.—God shall inflict these desolating judgments on Egypt, ver. 8, "They shall know that I am the Lord," and greater than all gods, than all "their" gods, when I have "set a fire in Egypt."

APPROACHING OVERTHROW OF PHARAOH.—Ver. 21—26. The prophet declares that the extent of his territories shall be abridged, his wealth and power shall be diminished, and he shall become less able than ever to help either himself or his friend. 1. This was in part done already: "I have broken the arm of Pharaoh" some time ago. One arm of that kingdom might well be reckoned "broken," when the king of Babylon routed the forces of Pharaoh-Necho at Carchemish, Jer. xlvi. 2, and made himself master of "all that pertained to Egypt from the river of Egypt to Euphrates," 2 Kings xxiv. 7. Egypt had been long in gathering strength, and extending its dominions, and therefore, that there may be a proportion observed in providence, it loses its strength "slowly" and "by degrees." It was soon after the king of Egypt slew good king Josiah, and in the same reign, that its "arm was thus "broken," and it received that fatal blow which it never recovered. Before Egypt's e Assyrian monarchy was history. It seems to have nacherib. But it is not cerly it was reduced about the him and Cyaxares king of one of the most extensive n to decay, until it was at agreed as to where it was l upon several passages in the prophet mentioned the nown to have lately taken dom: and his great power, his friends, resembled the a very flourishing cedar on venues which the king drew tensive commerce, through n ocean; or in a word, the rivers and streams, which hese means this empire and their power became more formidable, and their vassals more numerous than those of any other people: so that cities, provinces, and nations, courted their alliance; took shelter under their powerful protection; and increased and prospered under it, as the fowls of the air amidst the boughs, and the beasts of the field under the covert, of the wide-spreading lofty cedar. Thus the monarch became renowned and honourable; and this cedar in Lebanon grew more lofty than any cedar in the garden of God, or in Eden; or any of the kingdoms or independent states, which might be compared to fir-trees, and chestnut-trees, or any other stately and beautiful trees. Perhaps the ascendancy acquired by the Assyrian monarchs over the kings of Judah likewise, may be alluded to by the expression, that "no tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty." However, they were so prospered in the providence of God, that all other kings and princes envied them their great success and renown.

ITS OVERTHROW.—Ver. 14—17. The Lord destroyed the Assyrian monarchy, for a warning to all other kings and nations, not to be ambitious of dominion, or proud of pre-eminence, or secure in prosperity; and not to depend on themselves, or forget God as the Author of their advantages; for the rivers, whence they drank waters, came originally from that ocean.—All the monarchs of Assyria, or the last king and all his proud princes; and all those in every age who had domineered over their neighbours, and despised God, had been delivered to death, and their bodies were gone under the earth, amidst the rest of the children of men, even like the meanest of them, who without funeral pomp are thrown into the pit: and this was the end of their greatness, to which many of them had been hurried by a violent and premature death.—Indeed, when the Assyrian monarch went down to the grave, the Lord so ordered it, that there was a great mourning for him.—"The deep, that nursed up this fair tree, is described as mourning at its downfall; as if the floods had stopped their usual course on purpose to lament his fate. The forest of Lebanon sympathized with his misfortunes; that is, all his confederates and allies." [Lowth.] His fall affected many nations and provinces, and vast multitudes of people, who had lived under his government and contributed to his greatness. A stop was put by his death to their enriching commerce, and to all the business connected with the government of so vast an empire: and all, who grew rich by collecting the revenue, or by honourable and lucrative offices, would doubtless lament his fall.—This seems to be meant by the Lord's covering the deep, and restraining the floods, as in mourning for him, which denotes a stagnation of that profitable circulation, which there must be in a prosperous empire, betwixt all parts of it and the seat of government. Especially the Assyrian nobles and people, the Lebanon where this cedar grew, doubtless deplored the loss of that empire which they had so long possessed,

7 And when I shall [‡]put thee out, [t]I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark;[s] I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.

8 All the [§]bright lights of heaven will I make [‖]dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord GOD.

9 I will also [*]vex the hearts of many people, [k]when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.

10 Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them; and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord GOD, [n]The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee.

12 By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall, [o]the terrible of the nations, all of them; and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will [p]destroy also all the beasts thereof[4] from beside the great waters; [q]neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

14 Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord GOD.

15 When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be [†]destitute of that whereof it was full, when I shall smite all them that dwell therein, [r]then shall they know that I am the LORD.

16 This is [s]the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nation shall lament her: they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord GOD.

17 ¶ It came to pass also [t]in the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month,[5] that the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, [u]wail for the multitude of Egypt, and [x]cast them down,[6] even her, and the daughters of the famous nations, [y]unto the nether parts of the earth, with them that go down into the pit.

19 Whom [z]dost thou pass in beauty? [a]go down, and be thou laid [b]with the uncircumcised.

20 They shall [c]fall in the midst of them that are slain by the sword; [‡]she is delivered to the sword: [d]draw her and all her multitudes.

21 The [e]strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of hell with them that help him: they are [f]gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword.

22 [g]Asshur is there, and all her company: his graves are about him: all of them slain, fallen by the sword.

23 Whose graves are set in the sides of the pit,[7] and her company is round about her grave; all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which caused [§]terror in [k]the land of the living.

24 There is Elam, and all her multitude round about her grave; all of them slain, fallen by the sword, which are gone down uncircumcised into the nether parts of the earth, which caused their terror in the land of the living; yet have they [n]borne their shame with them that go down to the pit.

25 They have [o]set her a bed in the midst of the slain with all her multitude: her graves are round about him; [p]all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword: though their terror was caused in the land of the living, yet they have borne their shame with them that go down to the pit; he is put in the midst of them that be slain.

26 There is [q]Meshech, Tubal, and all her multitude: her graves are round about him; [r]all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword, though they [s]caused their terror in the land of the living.

27 And they [t]shall not lie with the mighty that are fallen of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to hell with [‖]their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads;[8] [u]but their iniquities shall be upon their bones, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

28 Yea, [x]thou shalt be broken in the midst of the uncircumcised, and shalt lie with them that are slain with the sword.

29 There is Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are [*]laid by them that were slain by the sword: they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

30 There be [z]the princes of the north,[9] all of them, and all [a]the Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain: with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they lie uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword, [b]and bear their shame with them that go down to the pit.

31 Pharaoh shall see them, and [c]shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord GOD.

32 For [d]I have caused my terror in the land of the living: and he shall be laid in the midst of the uncircumcised with them that are slain with the sword, even Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord GOD.

CHAP. XXXII. LAMENTATION FOR PHARAOH.—Ver. 11—16. The instances of the desolation appear here very frightful; much the same with what we had before, chap. xxix. 10—12, xxx. 7. First, The multitude of Egypt shall be destroyed; not decimated, some picked out to be made examples, but all cut off. Note, The numbers of sinners, though they be a multitude, will neither secure them against God's power, nor entitle them to his pity. Secondly, The pomp of Egypt shall be spoiled; the pomp of their court, what they have been proud of. Note, In renouncing the pomps of this world we did ourselves a great kindness, for they are things that are soon spoiled, and that cheat their admirers. Thirdly, The cattle of Egypt, that used to feed by the rivers, shall be destroyed; either cut off by the sword, or carried off for a prey. Egypt was famous for horses, which would be an acceptable booty to the Chaldeans. The rivers shall be no more frequented as they have been by man and beast, that came thither to drink. Fourthly, The "waters of Egypt," that used to flow briskly, shall now grow deep and slow and heavy, and shall "run like oil;" a figurative expression, signifying that there should be such universal sadness and heaviness upon the whole nation, that even the rivers should go softly and silently like mourners, and quite forget their rapid motion. Fifthly, The whole country of Egypt shall be stripped of its wealth; it shall be "destitute of that whereof it was full," corn and cattle, and all the pleasant fruits of the earth; when those are "smitten that dwell therein," the ground is untilled, and that which is gathered becomes an easy prey to the invader. Note, God can soon empty those of this world's goods that have the greatest fulness of those things, and are full of them; that enjoy most, and have their hearts set upon those enjoyments. The Egyptians were full of their pleasant and plentiful country, and its rich productions. Every one that talked with them might perceive how much it filled them. But God can soon make their "country destitute of that whereof it is full;" it is therefore our wisdom to be full of "treasures in heaven."

DESTRUCTION OF OTHER HEATHEN KINGDOMS.—Ver. 22—32. Let us see who they are, that are "gone to the grave" before Egypt, that "lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword," with whom she must now take up her lodging. 1. There lie the Assyrian empire, and all the princes and mighty men of that monarchy; ver. 22, "Ashur is there, and all her company;" all the countries that were tributaries to, and had dependence upon that crown, that mighty potentate, who used to lie in state, with his guards and grandees about him, now lies in obscurity, with his "graves about him," and his soldiers in them, unable any longer to do him service or honour; they are "all of them slain; fallen by the sword;" the number of their months was "cut off in the midst," and, being "bloody and deceitful men," they were not suffered to "live out half their days." Their "graves were set in the sides of the pit," all in a row, like beds in a common chamber, ver. 23. All their company is such as were "slain, fallen by the sword;" a vast congregation there is of such, who had "caused terror in the land of the living." 2. There lies the kingdom of Persia, which, perhaps, within the memory of man at that time, had been wasted and brought down; "there is Elam and all her multitude," the king of Elam and his numerous armies, ver. 24, 25. They also had "caused their terror in the land of the living," had made a fearful noise and bluster among the nations in their day. But Elam has now a grave by herself, and the graves of the common people "round about her fallen by the sword;" she has "her bed in the midst of the slain," that went down uncircumcised, unsanctified, unholy, and not in covenant with God. 3. There lies the Scythian power, which, about this time, was busy in the world. Meshech and Tubal, those barbarous northern nations, had lately made a descent upon the Medes, and "caused their terror" among them, lived among them upon free quarters for some years, making every thing their own that they could lay their hands on; but, at length, Cyaxares, king of the Medes, drew them by a wile into his power, cut off abundance of them, and obliged them to quit his country, ver. 26. There lie Meshech and Tubal, and all their multitude; there is a burying-place for them, with their chief commander in the midst of them, "all of them uncircumcised, slain by the sword." These Scythians, dying ingloriously as they lived, are not laid, as the other nations spoken of before, in the bed of honour; ver. 27, "they shall not lie with the mighty," shall not be buried in state, as those are, even by consent of the enemy, that are slain in the field of battle, that "go down to their graves with their weapons of war" carried before the hearse, or trailed after it, that have particularly "their swords laid under their heads," as if they could sleep the sweeter in the grave when they laid their heads on such a pillow; these Scythians are not buried with these marks of honour, but "their iniquities shall be upon their sons;" they shall, for their iniquity, be left unburied; though they were the "terror" even "of the mighty in the land of the living." 4. There lies the kingdom of Edom, which had flourished long, but, about this time, at least before the destruction of Egypt, was made quite desolate, as was foretold, chap. xxv. 13. Among the sepulchres of the nations, "there is Edom," ver. 29. There lie, not dignified with monuments or inscriptions, but mingled with common dust, "her kings and all her princes," her wise statesmen, (which Edom was famous for,) and her brave soldiers; these "with their might are laid by them that were slain by the sword;" their might could not prevent it,

Others f the gospel, zealous ef to doubt of their et, or grasp at immoderate or unlawful advantages. Thus they count themselves righteous persons, favourites of heaven, and interested in the promises of life: and yet they commit iniquity, and practically fall into the old detestable aphorism, "Let us sin on, that grace may abound." —Others, having for a time made a plausible profession of religion, conclude themselves certainly converted; and then venture into sin upon the supposition that God will not damn them for it; and quiet their consciences by abusing the doctrine of final perseverance, and the examples of some believers, of whom it is recorded in Scripture, that they fell into the same sins.—It is possible for a true believer to be caught in any of these nets for a time; the only question is, whether he will or will not eventually be delivered from them, though by sharp rebukes and corrections, and thus return to God with weeping and supplication.—Scott.

TIDINGS OF THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 21, 22. Here we have, 1. The tidings brought to Ezekiel of the burning of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. The city was burnt in the eleventh year of the captivity, and the fifth month, Jer. lii. 12, 13. Tidings hereof were brought to the prophet by one that was an eye-witness of the destruction, in the twelfth year, and the tenth month, which was a year and almost five months after the thing was done; we may well suppose that, there being a constant correspondence, at this time more than ever, kept up between Jerusalem and Babylon, he had heard the news long before. But this was the first time he had an account of it from a refugee, from one who escaped, who could be particular, and would be pathetic, in the narrative of it. And the sign given him was, the coming of such a one to him as had himself narrowly escaped the flames; chap. xxiv. 26, "He that escapes in that day, shall come unto thee," to "cause thee to hear it with thine ears," to hear it more distinctly than ever, from one that could say, Quæque ipse miserrima vidi—These miserable scenes I saw. 2. The divine impressions and influences he was under, to prepare him for those heavy tidings: "the hand of the Lord was upon me before he came, and had opened my mouth" to speak to the house of Israel what we had in the former part of this chapter; and now "he was no more dumb," he prophesied now with more freedom and boldness, being by the event proved a true prophet, to the confusion of those that contradicted him. All the prophecies from chap. xxiv. to this chapter, having relation purely to the nations about, it is probable that the prophet, when he received them from the Lord, did not deliver them by word of mouth, but in writing; for he could not say to the Ammonites, Say unto Tyrus, Say unto Pharaoh, &c. so and so, but by letters directed to the person concerned; as Zacharias, when he could not speak, wrote; and herein he was as truly executing his prophetic office as ever. Note, Even silenced ministers may be doing a great deal of good by writing letters and making visits. But now the prophet's "mouth is opened,"

CHAP. XXXIV.

The shepherds of Israel reproved, 1: God's judgment against them, 7: his providence over his flock, 11. The kingdom of Christ, 20.

AND the word of the LORD came[1] unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against [a]the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD unto the shepherds, [b]Woe be to the shepherds of Israel[2] that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds [c]feed the flocks?

3 Ye [d]eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool, [e]ye kill them that are fed: but ye feed not the flock.

4 The [f]diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye [g]sought that which was lost; [h]but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.

5 And [i]they were scattered, [*]because there is no shepherd: [k]and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when they were scattered.

6 My sheep [l]wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, [m]and none did search or seek after them.

7 ¶ Therefore, [n]ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

8 As I live, saith the Lord GOD, surely because [o]my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd, neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but [p]the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock:

9 Therefore, [q]O ye shepherds, hear the word of the LORD;

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [r]I am against the shepherds; [s]and I will require my flock at their hand, [t]and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more: [u]for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

11 ¶ For thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [x]I, even I, will both [y]search my sheep, and seek them out.

12 [†]As a shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered; so will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered [z]in the cloudy and dark day.

13 And [a]I will bring them out from the people,[3] and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, [b]and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.

14 I will [c]feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be: [d]there shall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel.

15 I will feed my flock, and [e]I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord GOD.

16 I will [f]seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick: [g]but I will destroy the fat and the strong; [h]I will feed them with judgment.

17 And as for you, O my flock, thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, [i]I judge between [‡]cattle and cattle, between the rams and the [§]he goats.

18 Seemeth it [k]a small thing unto you [l]to have eaten up the good pasture, but ye must [m]tread down[4] with your feet the residue of your pastures? and to have drunk of the deep waters, but ye must foul the residue with your feet?

19 And as for my flock, they eat that which ye have trodden with your feet; and they drink that which ye have fouled with your feet.

20 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD unto them, [n]Behold, I, even I, will judge between the fat cattle and between the lean cattle.

21 Because [o]ye have thrust with side and with shoulder, and pushed all the diseased with your horns, till ye have scattered them abroad; that he may "speak to the children of his people." It is probable that he had, during these three years, been continually speaking to them as a friend, putting them in mind of what he had formerly delivered to them, but that he never spake to them as a prophet, by inspiration, till now, when the "hand of the Lord came upon him," renewed his commission, gave him fresh instructions, and "opened his mouth," furnished him with power to speak to the people "as he ought to speak."—Henry.

HYPOCRISY.—Ver. 30—33. Whilst the prophet was affectionately seeking the good of his people; they were continually talking of him, or against him, wherever they met together. He was their constant topic, and it was their recreation to animadvert on him, or to ridicule him. But he would perhaps never have known it, had not the Lord seen it good, that he should reprove them in his name for it.—They invited each other to come and hear the word of the Lord from him; and they came and sat before him with the same apparent seriousness, as the most pious people could do: they gave him a patient and apparently an attentive hearing; yea, they professed much love to him and his doctrine; but their hearts were possessed by covetousness; their leading affections and desires went forth after riches: they loved their money more than either God or man, the prophet, his word, or their own souls; and therefore they would not part with one gainful sin, for all that he could say; but would rather cavil at it, or ridicule it. —Scott.

CHAP. XXXIV. UNFAITHFUL SHEPHERDS.—Ver. 2—6. Jerusalem was destroyed, the land desolated, and the Lord's flock scattered or destroyed; and the wicked shepherds were about to be called to account as the principal criminals who had occasioned so great an evil. The shepherds of Israel signify their rulers and teachers: their kings and princes, priests and prophets, scribes and elders. The duty of the shepherd is to feed the flock, and to make that his principal object: but they were only careful to feed themselves. They had eaten the fat, or the milk, of the flock, clothed themselves with the wool, and killed the fattest of the sheep, without regarding what became of the rest. They made every advantage they could from their offices: they exacted their tributes and taxes, their tithes and perquisites, with great earnestness; and they oppressed, and even destroyed the people to enrich themselves; but they bestowed no pains to provide for the welfare of the state, or the souls of those intrusted to them.—They resembled those shepherds, who utterly neglect the weak and sickly of the flock, and leave them to die without attempting their recovery; who, if any have their bones broken or are wounded, do not bind them up; and if any are driven away by robbers or wild beasts, or wander from the fold, never seek to bring them back; but treat them with great cruelty, and are more like ravening wolves, than careful tender shepherds. Thus the rulers of Israel had neglected to rescue the oppressed, to relieve the destitute, to remedy grievances, to provide properly for the public safety, to redeem those that had been driven into captivity, or to encourage the return of such as had taken refuge among idolaters. Their teachers also were equally negligent of their souls: they neither encouraged the weak and wavering; nor attempted to remove their error, ignorance, or wickedness, by wholesome instructions, counsels, and examples; nor reclaimed those, that were turned aside to idolatry: but they employed their power in exacting upon the people, and made their sacred office a pretence for the most cruel oppressions and persecutions. By these means the people were scattered from the temple, abhorring the sacrifices of the Lord, and from Jerusalem and Judah, to escape the tyranny of their rulers; and so became as sheep without a shepherd. And by the impolicy, impiety, and wickedness of their leaders, and the fatal effects of their bad use of their authority, they were at length given up to be a prey to the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and other nations, to be destroyed or carried into captivity: so that in the event, the land was utterly desolated, and the Lord's flock, his visible church, was left to wander on the dark mountains of the heathen, and was scattered over the face of the earth.—This was equally applicable to the rulers, priests, and scribes in the days of Christ, and to the subsequent doom and condition of the Jewish nation.—Scott.

GOD—THE GREAT SHEPHERD.—Ver. 11—16. 1. God will "gather" his sheep together that were "scattered," and bring them back to the fold that had "wandered" from it; "'I, even I,' who alone can do it, will do it, and will have all the glory of it. 'I will both search my sheep, and find them out,' as a 'shepherd' does, and bring them back as he does the stray sheep, upon his shoulders, 'from all the places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day.'" There are cloudy and dark days, windy and stormy ones, which scatter God's sheep; which send them hither and thither, to divers and distant places, in quest of secresy and safety. But (1.) Wherever they are, the eye of God will "find them out;" for his eyes run to and fro through the earth, in favour of them. "I will seek out my sheep;" and not one that belongs to the fold, though driven ever so far off, shall be lost. The Lord knows them that are his; he "knows their work," and "where they dwell," Rev. ii. 13, and where they are hidden. (2.) When his time is come, his arms will "fetch them home." "I will bring them out from the people." God will both incline their hearts to come by his grace, and will by his providence open a door for them, and remove every difficulty that lies in the way. They shall not return one by one, clandestinely stealing away, but they shall return in a body; "'I will gather them from the countries' into which they are dispersed; not only

CHAP. XXXV. JUDGMENT OF MOUNT SEIR.—Ver. 2—5. The descendants of Esau inhabited mount Seir: and as they inherited his enmity against Jacob, on account of the birth-right and blessing; so they seem to have been considered as in some respects the representatives of the enemies of the church in every age. Ver. 6. "Since thou hast loved cruelty, and taken delight in shedding blood, vengeance shall pursue thee, and thou shalt fall into the hands of those that will be as eager to shed thine:—the words imply more than they express." [Lowth.]—The blood of the Israelites, shed from hatred of God and his people, is especially meant. Ver. 9. "Cities," &c. The cities of Judah and Israel at that time lay desolate; but they were about to be rebuilded and replenished; the flourishing cities of Edom, on the contrary, would speedily be destroyed, and never return to their former condition, Mal. i. 3, 4.—"The Nabatheans having driven the Edomites out of their ancient habitations, in the time of the Babylonish captivity; they settled themselves in the southern part of Judea, where they were afterwards conquered by Hyrcanus, and obliged to embrace the Jewish religion, and so became at length incorporated with that nation." [Prideaux.]—Ver. 10. The Edomites expected to get possession of the countries both of the Israelites and Jews, as living in the neighbourhood, or as allies for some time of the Chaldeans; and perhaps they were encouraged by some vague tradition concerning that land having been promised to the posterity of Abraham and Isaac; and concerning Esau the elder brother having been supplanted by Jacob. This expectation seems to have excited their ardour in seeking the ruin of the Jews and in rejoicing over it. But the Lord, the proprietor of the land, had dwelt there, in his temple, and by his ark and visible glory: he had given abundant proofs of his power, in putting the descendants of Jacob in possession of it and maintaining them in it: and though he had now for their sins given them into the hands of the Chaldeans; yet he reserved that holy land for their posterity, and the Edomites would not be able to deprive them of it. Ver. 12, 13. The Edomites not only coveted the fertile inheritance of Israel, and entertained a family and national antipathy against them; but they hated and despised them because of their relation to JEHOVAH. When they therefore saw the land desolated, and the people destroyed or carried captive, they reviled the mountains of Israel, and thus blasphemed God, as if he had been unable to keep possession; and they boasted and gloried, as if the God of Israel had been overcome, as well as the nation of Israel.—Scott.

the word of the Lord GOD; Thus saith the Lord GOD [k]to the mountains and to the hills, to the [i]rivers and to the valleys, [l]to the desolate wastes and to the cities that are forsaken, which became [m]a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen that are round about;

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [n]Surely in the fire of my jealousy[2] have I spoken [o]against the residue of the heathen, and [p]against all Idumea, which have [q]appointed my land into their possession [r]with the joy of all their heart, [s]with despiteful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

6 Prophesy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto [t]the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy, and in my fury, because [u]ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD, [x]I have lifted up mine hand, Surely [y]the heathen that are about you, they shall bear their shame.

8 ¶ But ye, O mountains of Israel,[3] [z]ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are [a]at hand to come.

9 For, behold, [b]I am for you, and [c]I will turn unto you, and ye shall be tilled and sown:

10 And [d]I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of it: and the cities shall be inhabited, and [e]the wastes shall be builded:

11 And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: [f]and I will settle you after your old estates, and [g]will do better unto you than at your beginnings; [h]and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and [i]they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt [k]no more henceforth bereave them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations;

14 Therefore thou shalt devour men [l]no more, neither [i]bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord GOD.

15 Neither will I [m]cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shalt thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shalt thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord GOD.

16 ¶ Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, [n]they defiled it by their own way, and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore [p]I poured my fury upon them for the blood that they had shed[4] upon the land, and for their idols wherewith they had polluted it:

19 And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: [s]according to their way, and according to their doings, I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, [t]they profaned my holy name,[5] when they said to them, These are the people of the LORD, and are gone forth out of his land.

21 ¶ But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord GOD, I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went.

23 And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; [x]and the heathen shall know that I am the LORD, saith the Lord GOD, [b]when I shall be sanctified in you before [j]their eyes.

24 For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land.

25 ¶ Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean:[6] from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you.

26 A [g]new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away [h]the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh.

27 And [i]I will put my Spirit within you, and [k]cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

28 And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; [m]and ye shall be my people, and I will be your GOD.

29 I will also save you from all your uncleannesses; and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no famine upon you.

30 And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

32 Not [s]for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord GOD, be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

33 Thus saith the Lord GOD, In the day

CHAP. XXXVI. PROMISE OF RICH BLESSING.—Ver. 8—15. 1. Their rightful owners should return to the possession of the mountains of Israel; "My people Israel are at hand to come." Though they are at a great "distance" from their own country, though they are "dispersed" in many countries, and though they are "detained" by the power of their enemies, yet they shall "come again to their own border," Jer. xxxi. 17. The time is "at hand" for their return. Though there were above forty years of the seventy, (perhaps fifty,) yet remaining, it is spoken of as "near," because it is "sure," and there were some among them that should live to see it. A "thousand years" are with God but as "one day." The mountains of Israel are now desolate; but God will "cause men to walk upon them" again, "even his people Israel," not as travellers passing over them, but as inhabitants, not tenants, but freeholders. 2. They should afford a plentiful, comfortable maintenance for their owners, at their return. When the land had "enjoyed her Sabbaths" for so many years, it should be so much the more fruitful afterward, as we should be after rest, especially a Sabbath-rest; "Ye shall be tilled and sown," ver 9, and shall "yield your fruit to my people Israel." 3. The people of Israel should have not only a comfortable sustenance, but a comfortable settlement in their own land; the "cities shall be inhabited, the wastes shall be builded," ver. 10. And "I will settle you after your old estates," ver. 11. Their own sin had "unsettled them," but now God's favour shall resettle them. When the prodigal son is become a penitent, he is settled again in his father's house, according to his former estate; Bring hither the "first robe," and put it on him. Nay, "I will do better unto you now than at your beginnings." 4. The people after their return, should be "fruitful and multiply, and replenish the land," so that it should not only be inhabited again, but as thickly inhabited, and as well peopled as ever. God will bring back to it "all the house of Israel, even all of it;" observe what an emphasis is laid upon that, ver. 10, all "whose spirits God stirred up to" return.—Henry.

THE NEW HEART.—Ver. 25—27. In allusion to the divers washings and sprinklings of the ritual law, the Lord promised "to sprinkle clean water on his people, and make them clean from all their filthiness and idols." Clean water is the universal purifier of our persons, garments, houses, streets, and cities; and under both the Old Testament, and the Christian dispensation, it hath been used as the emblem of the cleansing of our polluted souls from sin. But no water, however clean, or in what mode soever it be applied, can do more than take away "the filth of the flesh:" except as it is used for an outward sign of the inward and spiritual grace of the gospel.—Water is especially the sacramental sign of the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit; yet this is always connected with the atoning blood of Christ. When the latter is applied to the conscience, through faith, to cleanse it from dead works; the former is always applied to all the powers of the soul to purify them from the love and pollution of sin; and thus the sinner is "washed, and sanctified, and justified in the name of our Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Accordingly it is here promised, that the Lord would cleanse both the land, and the souls of the people, from the guilt and pollution of their wickedness and idols; from the filthiness before-mentioned, ver. 17, which had made them loathsome to him, and rendered a separation necessary. What next follows has been before explained; but it is here added, that the Lord "would put his own Spirit within them." Having prepared their hearts by his grace, he would dwell in them by his Spirit; and thus holy affections and dispositions being produced, preserved, and continually invigorated by his blessed influence, they would walk in his statutes, and observe and keep his commandments. These blessings would be given them for this purpose, and the Lord would thus efficaciously cause them to do so.—But of whom was this spoken? Doubtless many of the Jews, who returned from Babylon, were thus renewed and sanctified: yet numbers of them continued strangers to such special blessings, though preserved from outward idolatry. These promises indeed are pleaded by all true believers, in every age, and fulfilled to them: and this may be called the spiritual meaning. But the context speaks so expressly and repeatedly of the house of Israel being restored to the land, which the Lord had given to their fathers, that, in the prophetical meaning, I apprehend it greatly confirms the opinion of those, who suppose, that after the Jews shall be converted to Christ, they shall also be restored to their own land. Then these promises will be fulfilled to them in their fullest meaning: and the subsequent part of the prophecy will be literally accomplished, in the sight of all the nations; and the Jews are no doubt preserved a distinct people on purpose to make way for this great display of the Lord's power and truth, and thus to demonstrate to all the world the divine original of the Holy Scriptures.—Scott.

PRAYER AND ITS FRUITS.—Ver. 37. See how emphatically it is expressed; "Be it known to you," it is "not for your sakes;" which intimates that we are apt to entertain a high conceit of our own merits, and are with difficulty persuaded to disclaim a confidence in them. But, one way or other, God will make all his favourites to know and own that it is his grace, and not their goodness, his mercy, and not their merit, that made them so; and that therefore not unto them, not unto them, but unto him, is all the glory due. They must "repent" of the "sin" of their own "evil ways." They must own that the mercies they receive from God, are not only not "merited," but that they are a thousand times "forfeited;" and therefore they must be so far from boasting of their good works, that they must be "ashamed" and "confounded" for their "evil ways," and then they are best prepared for mercy. Yet let them know that they must "desire" and "expect" it, ver. 37. "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel." God has 10 So I prophesied, as he commanded me, and [o]the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

11 Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, [q]Our bones are dried,[3] and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts.

12 Therefore prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, O my people, [r]I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, [s]and bring you into the land of Israel:

13 And [t]ye shall know that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, 14 And [u]shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live; and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that [x]I the LORD have spoken it, and performed it, saith the LORD.

15 ¶ The word of the LORD came again unto me, saying,

16 Moreover, thou son of man, [y]take thee one stick, and write upon it,[4] [z]For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, [a]For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

17 And join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [d]Behold I will take the stick of Joseph,[5] which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

20 And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be [e]in thine hand before their eyes.

21 ¶ And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord GOD: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land:

22 And [g]I will make them one nation[6] in the land upon the mountains of Israel; [h]and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.

23 Neither [i]shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: [k]but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sin-

This would appear even a more hopeless service, than to prophesy the restoration of Israel to their ancient prosperity, or to preach to the most hardened sinners: yet he started no objections, but obeyed his orders. And whilst he was speaking, he seemed, in his vision, to hear a noise, and to see a great commotion among the bones; for behold, they were, so to speak, every one of them in quest of its kindred bone, and, under the Divine direction and influence, each speedily found its proper place, and was jointed to those bones that belonged to the same body, till the whole were formed into a vast number of complete skeletons; and then sinews, flesh, and skin covered them, and they became entire human bodies, but without life. The prophet was next ordered to prophesy to the wind, and to command it, in the name of the Lord, to blow from the four quarters of the heaven upon these slain men, that they might live; and whilst he obeyed his orders, they were restored to life, and he was surrounded with a vast army.—The wind seems to have been the emblem of the Spirit of God, the author and giver of life; and the same original word signifies both wind, breath, and the Spirit. This therefore represented the prophet's calling upon God by his Spirit to quicken these dead bodies, that by his power they might become living men. The whole vision was an instructive emblem of the power of God operating by means, which of themselves must be entirely inefficacious, and thus producing most stupendous effects. Ver. 11. The dry bones, indeed, aptly represented the ruined and desperate condition of both Israel and Judah: yet the language which they used was that of unbelief mingled with impatience; second causes seemed to give them no prospect of deliverance; and they overlooked the great first Cause of all: they therefore considered the state of the nation to be as desperate as that of these dead bones. Ver. 14. When Cyrus issued his proclamation, the Lord, as it were, opened the graves of the house of Israel; and when he stirred up their spirits to embrace the proffered liberty, he put his Spirit into them, that they might live; and their re-establishment in their own land evinced the truth of God in the prediction, and his power in its accomplishment.—"That principle of life expressed by breath or spirit; not excluding that new Spirit of grace, which God will at that time plentifully bestow upon them.—The principle of grace is often spoken of as a higher principle of life, and the earnest of our heavenly inheritance." [Lowth.]—The vision was evidently intended, in its primary meaning, to encourage the desponding Jews; and to predict both their restoration after the captivity, and also their recovery from their present long-continued dispersion. But it was also a clear intimation of the resurrection of the dead; and it likewise represents the power and grace of God in the conversion of the most hopeless sinners to himself.—Scott.

The army of Goy, 1: his evil attempts, 8: God's judgment against him, 14.

AND the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, [b]set thy face against [c]Gog, the land of [d]Magog,[1] *the chief prince of [e]Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord GOD, Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal;

4 And I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords:

5 [l]Persia, Ethiopia, and [†]Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet:

6 [m]Gomer, and all his bands; the house of [n]Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands; and many people with thee.

7 Be thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them.

8 ¶ After many days[2] thou shalt be visited: in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but it is brought forth out of the nations, [t]and they shall dwell safely all of them.

9 Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm; thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many people with thee.

10 Thus saith the Lord GOD, It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt [‡]think an evil thought:

11 And thou shalt say, I will go up to the land of unwalled villages; [a]I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell [§]safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates,

12 To [‖]take a spoil, and to take a prey; to [b]turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the [*]midst of the land.

13 [c]Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish,[3] [f]with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

14 ¶ Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord GOD, [g]In that day when my people of Israel [h]dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?

15 And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army:

16 And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, [i]as a cloud to cover the land; [m]it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, [n]that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

17 Thus saith the Lord GOD, Art thou he [o]of whom I have spoken in old time[4] [†]by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years, that I would bring thee against them?

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord GOD, [p]that my fury shall come up in my face.

19 For [q]in my jealousy, and in the fire of my wrath, have I spoken, [r]Surely in that day there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel;

20 So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence; and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the [‡]steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground.

21 And [t]I will call for a sword against him[5] throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord

UNION—THE TWO STICKS.—Ver. 15—22. This is here illustrated by a sign; the prophet was to take "two sticks," and write upon one, "For Judah," including Benjamin, those of the "children of Israel" that were "his companions;" upon the other, "For Joseph," including the rest of the tribes. These two sticks must be so framed as to fall into "one in his hand." The people take notice of this, and desired him "to tell them the meaning of it," for they knew he did not play with sticks for his diversion, as children do. Those that would know the meaning, should ask the meaning of the word of God, which they read and hear, and of the instituted signs by which spiritual and divine things are represented to us; the ministers' "lips" should "keep the knowledge" hereof, and the people should "ask it at their mouth," Mal. ii. 7. It is a necessary question for grown people, as well as children, to ask, "What mean ye by this service," by this sign? Exod. xii. 26. The meaning was, that Judah and Israel should become "one in the hand of God." 1. They shall be one; one nation. They shall have no separate interests, and, consequently, no divided affections. There shall be no mutual jealousies and animosities, no "remembrance," no "remains," of their former discord. But there shall be a perfect harmony between them; a good understanding one of another, a good disposition one to another, and a readiness to all good offices and services for one another's credit and comfort. They had been two sticks crossing and thwarting one another, nay, beating and bruising one another; but now they shall become one, supporting and strengthening one another. Vis unita fortior—"Force added to force is proportionally more efficient. Behold, how good and how pleasant a thing it is" to see Judah and Israel, that had long been at variance, now "dwelling together in unity." Then they shall become acceptable to their God, amiable to their friends, and formidable to their enemies, Isa. xi. 13, 14.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXVIII. GOG.—Ver. 2. "The prophecy, contained in this and the following chapter, without question relates to the latter ages of the world, when the whole house of Israel shall return into their own land. 'Gog, the land of Magog;' or 'of the land of Magog.' Magog was the son of Japheth, from whence the Scythians are generally supposed to be derived. The Mogul Tartars are still called so. By Gog and Magog may most probably here be meant the Turks. The land of Canaan has been for several years in the possession of the Turks. The people here called Gog, and their allies, will attempt to recover it again out of the hand of the Jews. This may probably occasion the war and victory here spoken of. The Septuagint takes the word Rosh, commonly translated chief, for a proper name: so they render the sentence thus; 'The prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal.' ROSH, taken as a proper name, signifies those inhabitants of Scythia, from whence the Russians derive their name and original." [Lowth.]—It is not indeed agreed what people or transactions are here predicted; but it seems evident, that they are not yet accomplished. Nothing occurred in the wars waged by the Syro-grecian kings against the Jews after the captivity, or in their conflicts with Antiochus Epiphanes, that answers to these predictions: and it is foretold, that these events would be fulfilled in "the latter days." It is therefore probably supposed, that the accomplishment will be posterior to the conversion of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land: and that the Turks, Tartars, or Scythians, from the northern parts of Asia, perhaps uniting with the inhabitants of some more southern regions, will make war upon the Jews, and be cut off in the manner here predicted.—Gog and Magog are mentioned by St. John, Rev. xx. 8, 9. It is probable that the inhabitants of the same regions are intended; but different events are evidently predicted: for that assault of Gog and Magog will follow the millennium, and happen just before the general judgment; but this rather refers to the times that will introduce the millennium.—Gog seems to be the name of the prince, Magog of his land or people.—Scott.

OVERTHROW OF GOG.—Ver. 14—23. It is here foretold that this furious, formidable enemy should be utterly cut off in this attempt upon Israel, and that it should issue in his own ruin. This is supposed by many to have its accomplishment in the many defeats given by the Maccabees to the forces of Antiochus, and the remarkable judgments of God executed upon his own person, for he died of sore diseases. But these things are here foretold, as usual, in figurative expressions, which we are not to look for the literal accomplishment of, and yet they might be fulfilled nearer the letter than we know of. 1. God will be "highly displeased" with this bold invader; "When he comes up" in pride and anger "against the land of Israel," and thinks to carry all before him with a high hand, then "God's fury shall come up in his face;" which is an allusion to the manner of men, whose colour rises in their faces when some high affront is offered to them, and they are resolved to show their resentments of it. God will speak against them in his "jealousy" for his people, and in "the fire of his wrath" against his and their enemies. See how God's permitting sin, his laying occasions of sin before men, and his making use of it to serve his own purposes, consist with his hatred of sin, and his displeasure against it. 2. His forces shall be put into the greatest "confusion" and "consternation" imaginable. "There shall be a great shaking" of them "in the land of Israel," a universal concussion, such as shall affect the "fishes and fowls," the "beasts and creeping things," and much more "the men that are upon the face of the earth," who sooner receive impressions of fear; there shall be such an earthquake as shall "throw down" the "mountains," those natural heights, and the "steep places," towers

17 ¶ And, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord GOD, [b]Speak unto [§]every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side [c]to my [‖]sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood.[7]

18 Ye shall [d]eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of [*]goats, [e]of bullocks, all of them [f]fatlings of Bashan.

19 And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you.

20 Thus [g]ye shall be filled at my table[8] with horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war, saith the Lord GOD.

21 And [h]I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, [i]and my hand that I have laid upon them.

22 So the house of Israel shall [k]know that I am the LORD their God from that day and forward.

23 ¶ And [l]the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they [m]trespassed against me, therefore [n]hid I my face from them, and [n]gave them into the hand of their enemies; so fell they all by the sword.

24 According to their uncleanness, and according to their transgressions, have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

RESTORATION OF JACOB.—Ver. 25—29. "Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob." 1. "Why now?" Now God will "have mercy upon the whole house of Israel;" (1.) Because it is time for him to stand up for his own glory, which suffers in their sufferings; "Now will I be jealous for my holy name," that that may no longer be reproached. (2.) Because they now repent of their sins; "They have borne their shame, and all their trespasses;" when sinners repent, and take shame to themselves, God will be reconciled, and put honour upon them. It is particularly pleasing to God, that these penitents look a great way back in their penitential reflections, and are ashamed of all their trespasses which they were guilty of, "when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid." 2. "What then?" When God has gathered them out of their enemies' hands, and brought them home again; (1.) Then God will have "the praise of it;" I will be "sanctified in them in the sight of many nations." As God was reproached in the reproach they were under during their captivity, so he will be "sanctified" in their reformation, and the making of them a holy people again, and will be glorified in their restoration, and the making of them a happy glorious people again. (2.) Then they shall have "the benefit of it; they shall know that I am the Lord

CHAP. XL.

The time, manner, and end of Ezekiel's vision, 1. The eight tables, 39, the chambers for the singers, 44: The porch of the house, 48.

IN the five and twentieth year of our captivity, in the beginning of the year, in the tenth day of the month, in the fourteenth year[1] after that the city was smitten, in the self-same day [d] the hand of the LORD was upon me, and brought me thither.

2 In [e] the visions of God brought he me into the land of Israel, and set me upon a very high mountain, * by which was as the frame of a city on the south.

3 And he brought me thither, and, behold, there was a man, [k] whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, [l] with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring-reed; and he stood in the gate.

4 And the man said unto me, Son of man, [m] behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee art thou brought hither: [n] declare all that thou seest to the house of Israel.[2]

5 And behold a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring-reed of six cubits long, by the cubit and an hand-breadth: so he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

6 ¶ Then came he unto the gate † which looketh toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad, and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

7 And every little chamber was one reed long, and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits; and the threshold of the gate, by the porch of the gate within, was one reed.

8 He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

9 Then measured he the porch of the gate,[3] eight cubits; and [y] the posts thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.

10 And [z] the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

11 And he measured the breadth of the entry of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.

12 The ‡ space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side; and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.

13 He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits,[4] door against door.

14 He made also posts of threescore cubits, even unto the post of [a] the court round about the gate.

15 And from the face of the gate of the entrance unto the face of the porch of the inner-gate, were fifty cubits.

16 And there were § narrow windows to [b] the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and likewise to the ‖ arches; and windows were round about * inward; and upon each post were [c] palm-trees.[5]

17 Then brought he me into [d] the outward court,[6] and, lo, * there were chambers, and a pavement made for the court round about: [f] thirty chambers were upon the pavement.

18 And the pavement by the side of the gates over against the length of the gates, was the lower pavement.

19 Then he measured the breadth, from the fore-front of the lower gate [g] unto the fore-front of the inner court † without, an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

20 ¶ And [h] the gate of the outward court ‡ that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.[7]

21 And [i] the little chambers thereof were three on this side, and three on that side; and the posts thereof, and the § arches thereof, were [k] after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And their windows, and their arches, and their [l] palm-trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; [m] and

CHAP. XL. THE VISION OF THE TEMPLE.—Ver. 2. The vision contained in the remainder of this book, is allowed by commentators to be one of the most obscure in the sacred Scripture: so that it is not fully agreed what city, temple, and land were intended; or whether it had reference to former or to future times; whether it be understood literally or figuratively; whether it relate to the church on earth, or that in heaven. Some think the following description of the temple was intended to show what Solomon's temple had been; others explain it of the second temple, and of the city, after they were rebuilded, and arrived at their greatest prosperity. There can, indeed, be little doubt, that the grand outlines of the description were taken from Solomon's temple, with all the additions made to its courts and outbuildings in after ages; and that in many particulars, it may be considered as a model of it, when destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. We may also suppose, that Zerubbabel, Joshua, and the other Jews, had respect to it, as far as circumstances would permit, in rebuilding the temple after the captivity. There are, however, several circumstances, which conclusively show, that something vastly superior to either the first or second temple was intended; and that the external description must be considered as a figure and emblem of spiritual blessings. This will appear, in many particulars, as we proceed: but especially the dimensions of the temple, city, and land; and the division of the land to the prince, priests, and tribes; and the river of water springing from the threshold of the temple, enlarging till it reached the Dead Sea, and sweetening its waters; with the trees growing on the banks of the river, bearing fruit every month, cannot be literally interpreted, or made to accord with any thing which has yet taken place.—"The general scope of Ezekiel's temple is, by giving a promise of restoring Solomon's, to preserve the Jews from defiling themselves with idolatry during their captivity; and when the time of that should be expired, to encourage them to go home and rebuild their temple, and observe the laws and ordinances prescribed by Moses, for performing God's worship there; which yet was never to be equal to Solomon's in every respect, before the Messiah should come, whose church should resemble Solomon's temple, in symmetry and beauty, in firmness and duration, in a regular, orderly, and decent worship of the true God; and in the manifestation of the Divine presence, at first by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, and ever since by the inward assistances, comforts, and protection of the same Spirit." [Lowth.] The state of the church, however, in that happy period which we are taught to expect, seems to be emblematically predicted.—"Nothing is more usual, than for the prophets to describe the state of the Christian church, by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service." [Lowth.] If we would judge of the propriety, with which those glorious days were predicted under such allusions; we must place ourselves in the situation of the pious Jews, when in captivity, who favoured the very dust and stones of their city and temple; and who could not well detach their ideas of the church's prosperity, from that of the external splendour of the sanctuary; or conceive of more glorious times for the worship of God, abstracted from the expectation of a larger temple or city. It is probable that the more immediate accomplishment of the prophecy will be subsequent to the conversion of the Jews, their restoration to their own land, the destruction of Gog and Magog, and the pouring out of the Spirit mentioned in the close of the foregoing chapter: and it will perhaps continue through the thousand years, during which Satan will be chained up in the bottomless pit. But whether there will be any external forms, analogous to those here predicted, cannot be determined, though in some respects it seems very improbable: it is, however, absurd to attempt laying down rules for church-government, discipline, or modes of worship, from so obscure a vision; seeing men of lively imaginations and contrary sentiments may, perhaps with equal plausibility, accommodate it to their systems.—In general, the vision seems to have been intended, both to remind the Jews of what they had lost by their sins, and so to lead them to repentance; and to encourage their hopes of the final prevalence of that cause, which was at that time so greatly depressed. A very, &c. "Mount Moriah is called 'a very high mountain,' because it represents the seat of the Christian church, foretold by the prophets, that it should be 'established on the top of the mountains.'"—"Mount Moriah lay southward of the hill of Zion, though northward of the lower part of the city, commonly called Jerusalem." [Lowth.]—The very high mountain, however, is not said to have been Moriah or Zion.—Scott.

37 And [l]the posts thereof were toward the outer court; and palm-trees were upon the posts thereof on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

38 And [m]the chambers, and the entries thereof, were by the posts of the gates, [n]where they washed the burnt-offering.

39 ¶ And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two [o]tables on that side, to slay thereon [p]the burnt-offering and [q]the sin-offering, and [r]the trespass-offering.[12]

40 And at the side without, [*]as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate, were two tables; and on the other side, which was at the porch of the gate, were two tables.

41 Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side, by the side of the gate; eight tables, whereupon they slew their sacrifices.

42 And the four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt-offering, of a cubit and an half long, and a cubit and a half broad, and one cubit high; whereupon also they laid the instruments, wherewith they slew the burnt-offering and the sacrifice.

43 And within were [†]hooks,[13] an hand broad, fastened round about: and [s]upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.

44 ¶ And without [t]the inner gate were the [u]chambers of the singers in the inner court, which was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south; one at the side of the east gate having the prospect toward the north.

45 And he said unto me, This chamber,[14] whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests, [x]the keepers of the [‡]charge of the house.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests,[15] [y]the keepers of the charge of the altar: these [z]are the sons of Zadok, among the sons of Levi, [a]which come near to the LORD to minister unto him.

47 So he measured the court, [b]an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad, four-square; and the altar that was before the house.

48 ¶ And he brought me to the [c]porch of the house, and measured each post of the porch, five cubits on this side, and five cubits on that side: and the breadth of the gate was three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side.

49 The length of the porch was twenty cubits,[16] and the breadth eleven cubits; and he brought me by [d]the steps whereby they went up to it: and there were [e]pillars by the posts, one on this side, and another on that side.

Dr Lightfoot hath accurately related the sense of the Jewish writers upon this subject, in his Temple service, ch. 8, sect. 2, 3.

ITS TABLES AND CHAMBERS.—Ver. 39—49. In these verses we have an account, 1. Of the tables that were in the porch of the gates of the "inner court." We find no description of the altars of burnt-offerings in the midst of that court, till chap. xliii. 13. But because the one altar under the law was to be exchanged for a multitude of tables under the gospel, here is early notice taken of the tables, at our entrance into the inner court; for till we come to partake of the "table of the Lord," we are but professors at large; our admission to that is our entrance into the "inner court." But in this gospel-temple we meet with no altar, till after the glory of the Lord has taken possession of it, for Christ is "our Altar," that sanctifies every gift. Here were "eight tables" provided, whereon to "slay the sacrifices," ver. 41. We read not of any tables for this purpose, either in the tabernacle, or in Solomon's temple. But here they are provided, to intimate the multitude of spiritual sacrifices that should be brought to God's house in gospel-times, and the multitude of hands that should be employed in offering up those sacrifices. 2. The use that some of the "chambers," mentioned before, were put to. (1.) Some were for the "singers," ver. 44. It should seem, they were first provided for before any other that attended this temple-service, to intimate, not only that singing of psalms should still continue a gospel-ordinance, but that the gospel should furnish all that embrace it with abundant matter for joy and praise, and give them occasion to "break forth into singing," which is often foretold concerning gospel-times, Ps. xcvi. 1; xcviii. 1. Christians should be singers. "Blessed are they that dwell in God's house," they will be "still praising him." (2.) Others of them were for "the priests;" both those that kept "the charge of the house," to cleanse it, and to see that none came into it to pollute it, and to keep it in good repair, and those that "kept the charge of the altar," that "came near to the Lord to minister to him." God will find convenient lodging for all his servants. Those that do the work of his house, shall enjoy the comforts of it. 3. Of the inner court; the court of the priests, which was fifty yards square. The altar that "was before the house," was placed in the midst of this court, over against the three gates, which standing in a direct line with the three gates of the outer court, when the gates were set open, all the people in the outer court might through them be spectators of the service done at the altar. Christ is both our Altar and our Sacrifice, to whom we must look with an eye of faith in all our approaches to God, and he is Salvation in the midst of the earth, Ps. lxxiv. 12, to be looked unto from all quarters. 4. Of the porch of the house. The "temple" is called "the house," emphatically, as if no other house were worthy to be called so.—Henry.

CHAP. XLI.

The measures, parts, chambers, and ornaments of the temple.

AFTERWARD [a]he brought me [b]to the temple, and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side, and six cubits broad on the other side, which was the breadth of the tabernacle.

2 And the breadth of the *door[1] was ten cubits; and the sides of the door were five cubits on the one side, and five cubits on the other side: and he measured [c]the length thereof, forty cubits, and the breadth, twenty cubits.

3 Then went he inward,[2] and measured the post of the door two cubits, and the door six cubits, and the breadth of the door seven cubits.

4 So he measured the length thereof, [d]twenty cubits, and the breadth, twenty cubits, before the temple:[3] and he said unto me, *This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the wall of the house six cubits; and the breadth of every [f]side-chamber four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side-chambers were three, [t]one over another, and [t]thirty in order; [g]and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side-chambers round about, that they might [h]have hold, but they had not hold in the wall of the house.[4]

7 And [i]there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side-chambers; for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.

8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side-chambers were [k]a full reed of six great cubits.

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side-chamber without, [l]was five cubits; and that [k]which was left was the place of the side-chambers that were within.

10 And between the chambers was the wideness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side.

11 And the doors of the side-chambers were toward the place that was left,[5] one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: [l]and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about.

12 Now the building that was before [m]the separate place, at the end toward the west, was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof ninety cubits.

13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long;

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house,[6] and of the separate place toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the *galleries thereof on the one side, and on the other side, an hundred cubits,[7] with [n]the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

16 The door-posts, and the [o]narrow windows, and the galleries round about on their three stories, over against the door, [t]ceiled with wood round about, and [t]from the ground up to the windows, and the windows were covered;[8]

17 To that above the door, even unto the inner house, and without, and by all the wall round about, within and without, [l]by measure.

18 And it was made [p]with cherubims[9] and [q]palm-trees, so that a palm-tree was between a cherub and a cherub; [r]and every cherub had two faces;

19 So that the face of a man was toward the palm-tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm-tree on the other side: it was made through all the house round about.

20 From the ground unto above the door were cherubims and palm-trees made, and on the wall of the temple.

21 The [l]posts of the temple were squared, and the face of the sanctuary; the appearance of the one as the appearance of the other.

22 The [s]altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, [t]This is the table that is before the LORD.[10]

23 And [u]the temple and the sanctuary had two doors.

24 And the doors had two leaves apiece, two turning leaves; two leaves for the one door, and two leaves for the other door.

25 And there were made on them, on the doors of the temple, [y]cherubims and palm-trees, like as were made upon the walls; and there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without.

26 And there were [z]narrow windows and palm-trees on the one side and on the other side, on the sides of the porch, and upon the side-chambers of the house, and thick planks.

CHAP. XLI. ARCHITECTURE AND FURNITURE OF THE TEMPLE.—Ver. 1. "By the posts are meant the door-cases on each side of the entrance. These were six cubits thick on the north and south sides:—the same thickness had the upper lintel over the door.—The word rendered tabernacle, sometimes signifies covering.—In this signification it may not be unfitly applied to the upper lintel, which is a kind of covering to the door." [Lowth.]—Some understand the verse of pent-houses, in the front of the porch, on each side, six cubits wide, with a covering of the same dimensions. Ver. 2. The door out of the porch into the sanctuary seems to have been wider than that out of the court into the porch, but the whole length of the porch is still made out to be twenty cubits, perhaps including the side walls. The dimensions of the first sanctuary, and of the most holy place, accord with those in Solomon's temple. Ver. 3. The partition wall, between the sanctuary and the holy of holies, is supposed to have been two cubits in thickness:—the breadth of the wall on each side the gate seven cubits; and the entrance six cubits in width. Ver. 5, 6. Six cubits. "The thickness of the wall from the foundation; the first story of the side-chambers." [Lowth.]—The lower side-chambers in Solomon's temple were five cubits wide.—"At five cubits' height from the ground, the wall which supported these outward chambers abated of its thickness one cubit; and there was a rest or ledge of one cubit's breadth, on which the ends of each story were fastened: but they were not fastened in the main wall of the house." [Lowth.] Ver. 7. "So much of breadth was added to the side-chambers as was taken out of the thickness of the wall: so that the middle story was one cubit, and the upper story two cubits larger than the lower rooms.—And winding stairs, which enlarged as the rooms did, went up between each two chambers, from the bottom to the top: and there were two doors at the top of each pair of stairs, one opening into one room, and the other into that over against it.—By 'the house' is meant these chambers three stories high," ver. 9. [Lowth.] Ver. 8. This may mean that the prophet from the upper chamber had a view of the height of these buildings, which surrounded the temple: and, considering the rests, as a part of the foundation on which they were supported, it was a full reed, or six large cubits, chap. xl. 3. Ver. 10. A different word is here used for chambers than before; and some suppose that another row of buildings, at twenty cubits' distance from the side chambers, is intended. There was a row of chambers joined to the temple, and another row of buildings parallel with them, with a passage of ten or eleven yards in breadth between them, besides the place that was left, before spoken of, ver. 9.—But the description, and the various explanations of different commentators, are very obscure: and probable conjecture seems all that can be attained to on the subject. Ver. 11. "The doors of the lower rooms opened into the void space between the chambers" [Lowth.] This was the case, both of those chambers which were on the south side, and those on the north side, of the temple. Ver. 12. It has been supposed that there was a row of buildings, on the south and north sides of the temple, (besides the side-chambers,) with a space of twenty cubits between: and perhaps some building was erected on the west end of the temple, seventy cubits wide and ninety long, with a wall five cubits thick. Some, however, understand the verse of a wall, which was continued from east to west, on the outside of all the buildings before-mentioned, by the sides of the temple, to the extent of ninety cubits, and at the west end, to seventy cubits.—From north to south is called its breadth, as it corresponded with the width of the temple; from east to west its length, as it was parallel with the length of the temple. From, &c. "He measured from the ground up to the windows of the temple, which were placed above the side-chambers. The windows were covered, either because the side-chambers hindered their being seen in the inner court; or else they were covered on the inside with curtains drawn before them." [Lowth.] Ver. 17. "The windows were placed above the height of the door, at the east end of the temple; and were continued at measured distances, at the same height along the wall, on both sides to the wall of the inner sanctuary; in which there were no windows." [Lowth.]—The windows on the out-buildings seem likewise to be included, which were placed at regular distances, and made in exact proportion. Ver. 18—20. "The cherubim had four faces: but only two of these appeared in the carved work; the other two faces, that of an ox or eagle being supposed to be hid in the plain or surface of the wall." [Lowth.] The two faces, which were most conspicuous, seem to be intended. Ver. 21. "The lintels both of the temple and the inner sanctuary were not arched, but square; with a flat beam laid on the top of the side-posts." [Lowth.] Ver. 22. "The altar of wood," must signify that on which incense was burned.—The dimensions are here much larger than those mentioned in Exodus; but that made by Solomon is supposed to have been larger than that made by Moses. Both of these, however, were covered with gold; and it is very remarkable, that in this temple described by Ezekiel, there is not the least mention made of gold or silver; though there was such a profusion of these metals, both in the tabernacle made by Moses, and in Solomon's temple. Does not this imply, that a glory of a more spiritual nature was intended under these emblems? Thus the glory of the second temple was greater than that of the first, because honoured by the personal presence of Immanuel.—Scott.

18 He measured the south side, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

19 He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

20 He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a separation between the sanctuary and the profane place.[6]

Capellus is of opinion, that instead of "five hundred reeds," we ought to read "five hundred cubits;" and this reading is supported by the Septuagint, by St Jerome, by the Jewish authors themselves, by all the interpreters, and by the actual size of the holy mountain. The smaller cubit is probably here intended.—CALMET.

that also is here measured, and found to take in a great compass. Observe, 1. What the dimensions of it were. It extended each way 500 reeds, each reed above three yards and a half, so that it reached every way about an English measured mile, which, the ground lying square, was above four miles round. Thus large were the suburbs (as I may call them) of this mystic temple; signifying the great extent of the church in gospel-times, when all nations should be discipled, and the kingdoms of the world made Christ's kingdoms. 2. Why the dimensions of it were made thus large. It was to make a separation, by putting a very large distance between the sanctuary and the profane place; and therefore there was a wall surrounding it, to keep off those that were unclean, and to separate between the "precious and the vile." Note, A difference is to be put between common and sacred things, between God's name and other names, between his day and other days, his book and other books, his institutions and other observances; and a distance to be put between our worldly and religious actions, so as still to go about the worship of God with a solemn pause.—Henry.

CHAP. XLIII. GOD'S GLORY IN THE NEW TEMPLE.—Ver. 2—5. "The word 'behold,' is an expression of joy and admiration: as if the prophet had said, Behold a wonderful and joyful sight! The glory of the God of Israel, which had so long departed from this place, is now returned to it, and the same way by which it departed." [Lowth.]—It is not recorded, that the glory of God visibly took possession of the second temple; as it had done of the tabernacle, and afterwards of Solomon's temple, when consecrated. It therefore seems necessary to look beyond the return of the Jews from Babylon, and the rebuilding of the temple, for the fulfilment of these predictions. Indeed the personal presence of Immanuel, at the second temple, rendered it more glorious than that built by Solomon, Hag. ii. 9; yet this part of the vision rather relates to the times, which are supposed to be predicted in the whole of this description; namely, those that shall succeed the conversion of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land.—The prophet saw the glory of the God of Israel coming "from the east." Christ is "the Sun of righteousness:" and the sun ariseth in the east; so did he arise in the eastern regions, and thence his light hath been communicated to the western world. It is not intimated, that a dark cloud attended this visible glory, as under former dispensations; for the full light of the gospel dispels the darkness which before rested on heavenly things. It was however attended by a voice like the noise of many waters; which may denote the efficacy of the gospel in alarming and converting sinners, or the terrible denunciations of the Lord's vengeance on all opposers of his people, whom he will overwhelm as by the roaring and vehemence of some great inundation. "The earth also shined with his glory:"

tions that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

9 Now [n]let them put away their whoredom, and [x]the carcases[3] of their kings, far from me, [y]and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 ¶ Thou son of man, [z]shew the house to the house of Israel, [a]that they may be ashamed of their iniquities; and let them measure the [†]pattern.

11 And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, [b]shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings-out thereof, and the comings-in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof: and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, [c]and do them.

12 This is the law of the house; [d]Upon the top of the mountain the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

13 ¶ And these are [e]the measures of the altar after the cubits; [f]The cubit is a cubit and an hand-breadth; even the [§]bottom shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border thereof by the [‖]edge thereof round about shall be a span; and this shall be the higher place of the altar.

14 And from the bottom upon the ground[4] even to the lower settle shall be two cubits, and the breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.

15 So [*]the altar shall be four cubits; and from [†]the altar and upwards shall be [‡]four horns.

16 And the altar shall be [h]twelve cubits long, twelve broad, [i]square in the four squares thereof.

17 And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long, and fourteen broad, in the four squares thereof: [k]and the border about it shall be half a cubit; and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about; [l]and his stairs shall [m]look toward the east.[5]

18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord GOD, These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, [n]to offer burnt-offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon.[6]

19 And thou shalt give to [o]the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, [p]which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord GOD, [q]a young bullock for a sin-offering.

20 And thou shalt [r]take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, [s]and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about: [t]thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it.

21 Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin-offering, and he shall [u]burn it in the appointed place[7] of the house, without the sanctuary.

22 And on the second day thou shalt offer [x]a kid[8] of the goats without blemish for a sin-offering; [y]and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock.

23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the LORD, and the priests shall cast salt upon them,[9] and they shall offer them up for a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

25 [a]Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin-offering: they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish.

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar, and purify it; and they shall [*]consecrate themselves.

27 And when these days are expired, it shall be, [b]that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priest shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your [†]peace-offerings; and [d]I will accept you, saith the Lord GOD.

THEN he brought me back the way of the gate [a]of the outward sanctuary[1] which [b]looketh toward the east, and it was shut.

2 Then said the LORD unto me, This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; [c]because the LORD, the God of Israel, hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

for the light of divine truth, displaying the glory of God in Jesus Christ, shall illuminate all the nations when those times shall arrive.—Scott.

POLLUTION OF THE PREVIOUS HOUSE.—Ver. 7—9. "They and their kings" had brought contempt on the religion they professed, and their relation to God "by their" spiritual "whoredom," their idolatry, and by worshipping images, which they called "their kings," for so Moloch signifies; or lords, for so Baal signifies; but which were really the "carcases of kings," not only lifeless and useless, but loathsome and abominable as dead carcases, "in their high places," set up in honour of them. They had defiled God's name by "their abominations." And what were they? It was "in setting their threshold by my thresholds, and their host by my hosts," adding their own inventions to God's institutions, and urging all to a compliance with them, as if they had been of equal authority and efficacy; "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men;" Isa. xxix. 13, or, rather, setting up altars to their idols even in the courts of the temple, than which a more impudent affront could not be put upon the Divine Majesty. Some give the sense of it; Though their houses joined close to God's house, their posts and thresholds to his, so that they were in a manner his next neighbours, "there was but a wall between me and them," (so it is in the margin,) so that it might have been expected they should have acquainted themselves with him, and been in care to please him, yet they were not so much as neighbourly. Note, It often proves too true, "The nearer the church the further from God."—Henry.

THE ALTAR AND ITS DEDICATION.—Ver. 13—17. The bottom of the altar, which lay on the ground, seems to have extended a full cubit beyond the rest of it; and a border of a span breadth was placed around it, as some think, to keep the blood of the sacrifices from running upon the pavement, and to confine it to the channel by which it was carried off. This was the "higher place," or ground, compared with the rest of the court, being raised one cubit above it. From this bottom to the lower settle was two cubits.—The settles seem to have been ledges of a cubit in breadth on each side of the altar, on which the priests might walk to perform what was needful to be done. From the lower settle to the higher was four cubits. The lower settle, or in-benching, is called "the lesser;" and "the higher," the "greater:" yet it does not appear that the higher was broader than the lower, and the extent of it must have been less; but it would be most conspicuous, on account of its height, and so more noticed. Above this upper settle the altar was raised, four cubits, and on the corners four horns were fixed. The upper part of the altar was twelve cubits square; but the lower settle, measuring at the outside, was fourteen: for the two settles deducted two cubits on each side from the dimensions of the bottom.—God commanded in the law, that the priests should not ascend by "stairs" or steps, to the altar: and the original here only means "ascents," probably by a sloping gradual rising.—"This ascent is directed to be placed at the east side of the altar, that they, who went up, should look toward the west and upon the temple; and should turn their backs to the rising sun in opposition to the rites of those idolaters who worshipped the rising sun. Dr. Lightfoot remarks, out of the Jewish writers, that within two cubits of the top, or place where the hearth was, there was another narrowing of a cubit in breadth, where the priests stood to officiate.—The description of this altar materially differs from the account given of that which was made when Solomon built the temple.—That was, indeed, nearly the same height as this, but it was twenty cubits square; and nothing is said about any settles or in-benchings; but the reader is led to suppose that it was as wide at the top as at the bottom; and the altar, erected after the captivity, was set upon his bases, probably on the very foundation of the altar made by Solomon, and of the same dimensions.—These considerations confirm the supposition, that the state of the church, or of Israel, when converted to Christ and restored to their own land, is predicted, under emblems taken from the ceremonies of the Mosaical dispensation. But, perhaps, the precise meaning of each particular will not be understood, till explained by the fulfilment. Ver. 18—27. These rules for the dedication of the altar, and consecration of the priests, in some things agreed with, in others differed from, those prescribed by Moses.—Scott

CHAP. XLIV. THE GATE.—Ver. 1—3. "He brought me to the gate of the outer sanctuary, which looked eastward: and that gate which I had seen formerly open, (as that by which the glory of God visibly entered into the temple,) was now shut.—Then said the Lord unto me, this gate shall continue shut, and no ordinary person shall ever enter by it; because the Lord God of Israel hath honoured and hallowed it, by entering in thereby." [Bp. Hall.]—Some suppose, that by the prince the high priest is meant; and others the civil governor, as Zerubbabel, or Nehemiah. But as no such rules were laid down in the Mosaic law, or prescribed concerning Solomon's temple: so there appear no traces of their having been observed under the second temple.—The prince, in many of the preceding prophecies, evidently means Christ; and whatever be prophetically intended, the injunction may remind us, that none can enter heaven, the true sanctuary, as Christ did; namely, by virtue of his own excellency, and his personal holiness, righteousness, and strength. He who is the brightness of JEHOVAH's glory entered this way; but it is now shut to the whole human race; and we all must enter as sinners, by faith in his blood, and by the communication of his grace.—The prince, having entered by the portico of this gate, would there sit to eat bread before the Lord, and then return

LAW OF THE NEW PRIESTHOOD.—Ver. 17—20. The garments of the priests are here referred to; though with some variations. The prescribed attire seems to denote, that every thing should be so devised, as to render Christians and ministers most unencumbered, and prepared for their work; and that they should avoid all appearance of evil, and whatever may prove offensive and disgustful in their deportment and ministrations. The putting off of their garments, that they might not sanctify the people with them, may refer to the superstitions in use among papists and others, which suppose some sanctifying efficacy inherent in the garments or relics of holy men. "They shall not tie them to an expectation of sanctity to be derived from them." [Bp. Hall.] All these superstitions will at length be abolished; and yet a decent distinction will be preserved between things sacred and common. The way also, in which the priests were directed to wear their hair, in the medium between opposite extremes, might denote the attention that should be paid to gravity and decorum in their external appearance, as well as the simplicity and spirituality of their hearts. Ver. 22. According to the law, the high priest was not allowed to marry either a widow, or a divorced person: but here, all the priests are forbidden to marry any widow, except the widow of a priest. This regulation plainly intimates the superior sanctity of the times referred to. It is observable, that marriage is always considered as consistent with the most sacred characters, and in the most holy persons, under every dispensation of the church, and even in its highest state of earthly purity. Ver. 23, 24. The priests and Levites under the Mosaic dispensation frequently acted as magistrates. In allusion to which, it is perhaps here intimated, that controversies will, in the times predicted, be generally decided by arbitration; by reference to ministers, and according to the law of God; and not by litigations before human tribunals, according to the laws of man. The particular mention of hallowing the Sabbath, in this emblematical prophecy of a future prosperous state of religion; implies the importance, as well as the perpetual obligation, of that sacred institution: when true piety most prevails, it will be most honoured by ministers and people.—Scott.

CHAP. XLV. THE SACRED TERRITORY.—Ver. 1—8. The division of the land, appointed in these verses and in the forty-eighth chapter, entirely differs from that which took place in the days of Joshua; and nothing at all answerable to it seems to have occurred when the Jews returned from Babylon; but whether it will be, in any measure literally fulfilled at their future restoration to their own land; or whether it figuratively describes the regulations which shall at length take place in the affairs of the church, needs not to be positively determined. It seems evident, that our translators did right shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

2 Of this there shall be for the sanctuary [c]five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the [i]suburbs thereof.

3 And of this measure shalt thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand: [d]and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

4 The [e]holy portion of the land shall be for the priests, the ministers of the sanctuary, [f]which shall come near to minister unto the LORD; and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary.

5 And [g]the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, [h]for a possession for twenty chambers.[2]

6 ¶ And ye shall appoint the possession of [i]the city five thousand broad, and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

7 ¶ And a portion shall be [k]for the prince on the one side and on the other side of the oblation of the holy portion, and of the possession of the city, before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward; and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

8 In the land shall be his possession in Israel: [l]and my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [m]Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: [n]remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your [3]exactions from my people, saith the Lord GOD.

10 Ye shall have [o]just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The [p]ephah and the bath shall be of one measure,[3] that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the ephah the tenth part of an homer; the measure thereof shall be after the homer.

12 And [q]the shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, five and twenty shekels,[4] fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

13 This is the oblation that ye shall offer; the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley.

14 Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths; [r]for ten baths are an homer:

15 And one [s]lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred, [t]out of the fat pastures[5] of Israel, for a meat-offering, and for a burnt-offering, and for [u]peace-offerings, [v]to make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord GOD.

16 All the people of the land [w]shall give this oblation [x]for the prince in Israel.

17 And it shall be [y]the prince's part to give burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new-moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: [z]he shall prepare the sin-offering, and the meat-offering, and the burnt-offering, and the [6]peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord GOD, [a]In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, [b]and cleanse the sanctuary:

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, [c]and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.

20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for [d]every one that erreth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of [e]the month, [f]ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And upon that day shall [g]the prince prepare for himself, and for all the people of the land, a [h]bullock for a sin-offering.

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare [i]a burnt-offering to the LORD, [k]seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish, daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering.

24 And he shall prepare a [l]meat-offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In [m]the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days,[7] according to the sin-offering, according to the burnt-offering, and according to the meat-offering, and according to the oil.

in adding the word reeds, to the numbers mentioned in this admeasurement; referring to the reed, that was in the hand of Ezekiel's divine conductor, which was about four yards long; for the length and breadth of the sanctuary are stated the same as before. So that, unless the text be there totally changed, without any authority, this passage, as well as that, must be understood of reeds; and except, when the suburbs are mentioned, the word cubit does not once occur in either place.—"According to this measure, (of cubits,) the portion here set out will be almost seven miles square; whereas, if we measure by reeds, it will arise to six times as much, and can only be understood in a mystical sense." [Lowth.]—This surely is not a sufficient reason for altering the original text; for a great part of the vision, on any supposition, can only be thus interpreted.—There are, however, those who make these measures immensely larger; but I neither understand their rules of computation, nor the grounds on which they proceed.—It is indeed evident, that the land of Canaan could by no means admit of so large a proportion being allotted to the sanctuary, with the priests and Levites, &c.; but, it is probable this was intended to intimate the immensely large extent of the Christian church above that of Israel; especially in those glorious times which are doubtless emblematically predicted.—Supposing, therefore, that reeds are intended, this holy oblation would constitute a square, on the lowest computation, of above forty miles on each side. On the north end of this square, a portion, of above sixteen miles in width, and above forty in length, is appointed for the priests, for their houses and possessions: but in the midst of this portion, the area of the sanctuary, about a mile square, was to be enclosed by a wall. Next to this, on the south, the other Levites were to receive their portion, of the same dimensions with that of the priests and the sanctuary. And south of this, the portion for the city, was to be marked out, of the same length, but only half the width, of the portions allotted to the priests and Levites. These three portions constitute the square of twenty-five thousand reeds; and that set apart for the Prince, (the breadth of which is not mentioned,) extended in length, equal to the breadth of the before-mentioned portions; from north to south, on both the east and the west sides of the square. In the predicted period, the worship and ministers of God will be liberally and conveniently provided for; the princes will be both able and willing to defray the expenses of government without oppressing their subjects: and will rule over them with equity and clemency, as the vicegerents of Christ; and the people will submit to them conscientiously, and live in peace, prosperity and godliness. These things seem to be represented in language taken from the customs of the times in which the prophet wrote.—Scott.

JUSTICE.—Ver. 10. "Ye shall have just balances," in which to weigh both money and goods; a "just ephah" for dry measure for corn and flour, a "just bath" for the measure of liquids, wine and oil; and the "ephah" and "bath" shall be "one measure," the tenth part of a "chomer," or "cor," ver. 11. So that the ephah and bath contained (as the learned Dr. Cumberland has computed) seven wine gallons and four pints, and something more. An omer was but the tenth part of an ephah, Exod. xvi. 36, and the 100th part of a "chomer" or "homer," and contained about six pints. The "shekel" is here settled; ver. 13, it is twenty "gerahs," just half a Roman ounce; in our money, 2*s.* 4½*d.* and almost the eighth part of a farthing; as the aforesaid learned man exactly computes it. By the shekels, the "maneh," or pound, was reckoned; which, when it was set for a mere weight, (says Bishop Cumberland,) without respect to coinage, contained just 100 shekels, as appears by comparing 1 Kings x. 17, where it is said, "three manehs," or "pounds, of gold, went to one shield," with the parallel place, 2 Chron. ix. 16, where it is said, 300 "shekels of gold went to one shield." But when the "maneh" is set for a sum of money or coin, it contains but sixty shekels, as appears here; where twenty shekels, twenty-five shekels, and fifteen shekels, which in all make sixty, shall be the "maneh." But it is thus reckoned, because they had one piece of money that weighed twenty shekels, another twenty-five, another fifteen, all which made up one pound; as a learned writer here observes. Note, It concerns God's Israel to be very honest and just in all their dealings, very punctual and exact in rendering to all their due, and very cautious to do wrong to none, because otherwise they spoil the acceptableness of their profession with God, and the reputation of it before men.—Henry.

SACRED ORDINANCES.—Ver. 14, 15. The oblation of the sixtieth part of the wheat, barley, and oil, and of one lamb out of two hundred, may be considered as the stock for the daily sacrifices, and the fund from which the ordinary expenses of the sanctuary were to be defrayed.—The word rendered reconciliation signifies atonement or expiation; that which covereth or blotteth out, the guilt of sin. Ver. 16. "The prince shall join with the people in making these oblations; whereas those that follow in the next verse, are to be at the sole expense of the prince." [Lowth.] Ver. 17. If Christ be meant by the Prince, as some think, this signifies, that he alone is the atoning sacrifice for the sins of his people; and whatever oblations they present, or whatever services they acceptably perform, must be offered in his name.—The feasts here specified were typical of Christ and his salvation, and represented the sacred seasons and instituted ordinances in the church, by which they are commemorated, and the blessings of them applied to the soul; especially the preaching of the gospel, the Lord's day, and the Lord's supper.—Scott.

7 And he shall prepare a meat-offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram; and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

8 And when the prince shall enter, [k]he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¶ But when the people of the land shall [l]come before the LORD in the solemn feasts, [m]he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship, shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And [n]the prince in the midst of them,[2] when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And [o]in the feasts, and in the solemnities, [p]the meat-offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare [q]a voluntary burnt-offering,[3] or peace-offerings voluntarily unto the LORD, one shall then [r]open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, [s]as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt [t]daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the LORD of a lamb [†]of the first year without blemish; thou shalt prepare it [‡]every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, [u]the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually, by a perpetual ordinance, unto the LORD.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat-offering, and the oil, every morning, for [x]a continual burnt-offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [y]If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons'; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his [z]to the year of liberty;[4] after it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover, [a]the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to [b]thrust them out of their possession: but he shall give his sons' [c]inheritance out of his own possession: that [d]my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¶ After he brought me through [e]the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall [f]boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering, where they shall [g]bake the meat-offering; that they bear them not out[5] into the outer court, [h]to sanctify the people.

21 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, *in every corner of the court there was a court.

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts [†]joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four [‡]corners were of one measure.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling-places under the rows round about.[6]

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, [i]where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

strange that no mention is made of the "evening-sacrifice;" but Christ being come, and having offered himself now "in the end of the world," Heb. ix. 26, we are to look upon him as the "Evening-sacrifice," about the time of the offering up of which he died. 2. On the Sabbath-days, whereas by the law of "Moses four lambs" were to be offered, Numb. xxviii. 9, it is here appointed that (at the prince's charge) there shall be "six lambs" offered, and a ram besides, ver. 4, to intimate how much we should abound in Sabbath-work, now in gospel-time, and what plenty of the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise we should offer up to God on that day; and if "with such sacrifices God is well pleased," surely we have a great deal of reason to be so. 3. On the new moons, in the beginning of their months, there was, over and above the usual Sabbath-sacrifices, the additional offering of a young bullock, ver. 6. Those who do much for God and their souls, statedly and constantly, must yet, upon some occasions, do yet more. 4. All the sacrifices were to be "without blemish;" so Christ, the great sacrifice, was, 1 Pet. i. 19, and so Christians, who are to present themselves to God as living sacrifices, should aim and endeavour to be; "blameless, and harmless, and without rebuke." 5. All the sacrifices were to have their meat-offerings annexed to them; for so the law of Moses had appointed, to show what a good table God keeps in his house, and that we ought to "honour him" with the fruit of our ground as well as with the fruit of our cattle, because in both he has "blessed us," Deut. xxviii. 4. In the beginning, Cain offered the one, and Abel the other. Some observe that the "meat-offerings here" are much larger in proportion than they were by the law of Moses. Then it was "three tenth-deals to a bullock," and "two to a ram," (so many tenth parts of an ephoh,) and half a hin of oil at the most, Numb. xv. 6—9; but here, for every bullock and every ram, a whole ephah, and a whole hin of oil, ver. 7. These unbloody sacrifices shall be more abounded in; or, in general, it intimates, that as now, under the gospel, God abounds in the gifts of his grace to us, more than under the law, so we should abound in the returns of praise and duty to him. But it is observable, that in the meat-offering "for the lambs," the prince is allowed to offer "as he shall be able to give," ver. 5, 7, 11, "as his hand should attain unto."

LAW OF POSSESSION.—Ver. 16—18.—We have here a law for the limiting of the power of the prince in the disposing of the crown-lands. 1. If he have a "son" that is a favourite, or has merited well, he may, if he please, as a token of his favour, and in recompense for his services, settle some parts of his land upon him and his heirs for ever, provided it do not go out of the family: there may be a cause for parents, when their children are grown up, to be more kind to one than to another, as Jacob gave to Joseph one portion "above his brethren," Gen. xlviii. 22. 2. Yet if he have a "servant" that is a favourite, he may not in like manner settle lands upon him. But if he see cause, he may give him lands to the year of Jubilee, and then they must return to the family again. The servant might have the rents, issues, and profits, for such a term, but the inheritance, the Jus proprietarium—The right of proprietorship, shall remain in the prince and his heirs. It was fit that a difference should be put between a child and a servant, like that, John viii. 35. "The servant" abides not in the house for ever, as the son does. 3. What estates he gives his children, must be of his own. "He shall not take of the people's inheritance," under pretence of having many children to provide for; he shall not find ways to make them forfeit their estates, or to force them to sell them, and so "thrust his subjects out of their possession;" but let him and his sons be content with their own. It is far from being a prince's honour to increase the wealth of his family and crown, by encroaching upon the rights and properties of his subjects; nor will he himself be a gainer by it at last, for he will be but a poor prince, when the people are "scattered every man from his possession," when they quit their native country, being forced out of it by oppression, choosing rather to live among strangers that are free people, and where what they have they can call their own, be it ever so little. It is the interest of princes to rule in the hearts of their subjects, and then all they have is, in the best manner, at their service. It is better for themselves to gain their affections by protecting their rights, than to gain their estates by invading them.—Henry.

PLACE OF PREPARING SOME SACRIFICES.—Ver. 19—24. "The flesh of the sacrifices, which were to be eaten, was to be boiled, except the flesh of the passover.—There was a place in the inner court for boiling the tresspass and sin-offerings; and boiling places, for the peace-offerings, which perhaps were dressed by the Levites; whereas the former were boiled by the priests in the court belonging to them."—"The Hebrew word Keturah, translated joined, is rendered in the margin, made with chimneys, which well agrees with the description." [Lowth.]—"About the walls of these little courts, which were as kitchens, were little chambers for the cooks."—Scott.

CHAP. XLVII. THE SACRED STREAM.—Ver. 1—5. This part of the vision must be understood figuratively; and this consideration is important, in forming a determination concerning the import of the whole vision.—Doubtless both Solomon's temple and the second temple were well supplied with water, conveyed thither in order to wash the sacrifices, and for similar purposes; and to preserve every thing clean and wholesome: but these waters flowed originally from the temple, not as a common sewer, but as a delightful fertilizing river. The prophet had before surveyed the doors of the house; but he now first discovered a very small stream of waters, (so the word signifies,) way without unto the outer gate by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

3 And when [d]the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; [e]the waters were* to the ancles.

4 Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; [f]the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, [g]waters [†]to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

6 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, [h]hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river.

7 Now, when I had returned, behold, at the *bank of the river were very [i]many trees on the one side and on the other.

8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, [k]and go down into the [†]desert, and go into the sea; which being brought forth into the sea, [l]the waters shall be healed.[z]

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the [‡]rivers shall come, [m]shall live; and there shall be [n]a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

10 And it shall come to pass, that the [o]fishers shall stand upon it, from [p]En-gedi even unto En-eglaim;[s] they shall be a place to spread forth nets: their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of [q]the great sea,[t] exceeding many.

11 But the miry places thereof, and the marishes thereof, [§]shall not be healed; they shall be [r]given to salt.

12 And [u]by the river, upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall [‖]grow all trees for meat, [v]whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth *new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary; and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for [†]medicine.

13 ¶ Thus saith the Lord GOD, [w]This shall be the border whereby ye shall inherit the land, according to the twelve tribes of Israel: [x]Joseph shall have two portions.

14 And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another; concerning the which I *lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall [y]fall unto you for inheritance.

15 And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of [a]Hethlon,[5] as men go to [b]Zedad;

16 [c]Hamath, [d]Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of [e]Damascus and the border of Hamath; [†]Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.[6]

17 And the border from the sea shall be [f]Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side.

18 And the east side ye shall measure [‡]from Hauran, and from Damascus, and [g]from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by [h]Jordan, from the border unto the east sea. And this is the east side.

19 And the south side southward, from [i]Tamar, even to the waters of [§]strife in Kadesh, the [‖]river to the great sea. And this is the south side *southward.

20 The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side.

21 So shall ye divide this land unto you according to the tribes of Israel.

22 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that [k]ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you,[l] and to the strangers[7] that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you; and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel.

23 And it shall come to pass, that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord GOD.

springing forth from under the threshold of the house eastward, at his right hand, and at the south side of the altar. These waters, no doubt, were an emblem of the "gospel preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven" to render it effectual: and conveying with it all spiritual blessings to the souls of believers, and to the nations of the earth.—"The gradual rise of the waters denotes the large effusion of the Spirit, which was very remarkable at the first publication of the gospel, and in its wonderful increase from small beginnings; and will be so again, when God shall 'pour out the Spirit of grace' upon the Jews, in order to their conversion.—The supplies of grace are often represented, in the holy writers, under the metaphor of a river, and streams watering the dry and thirsty earth, both cleaning and making fruitful the ground where they pass. The metaphor is probably taken from the river that watered paradise." [Lowth.]—When the prophet had been shown the source of these waters, he was led by his conductor to observe their progress and increase: and, as the east gate was shut, he was brought out from the temple northward.—When his conductor, with the line in his hand, had measured the length of a thousand cubits from the source, he led the prophet across the waters, which only reached to his ancles; but continuing to try their depth every thousand cubits, he found them grow still deeper every time, till they could no longer be forded, but were become a river impassable except by swiming.—This was an emblem of the progress of Christianity, from small beginnings to a vast increase; and the latter part of the representation may relate to the times, when the gospel shall fill the earth, and produce the most extensive and important good effects on the state of mankind in every nation.—Scott.

ITS HEALING PROPERTIES.—Ver. 9. Great plenty of fish that should be in this river: every living, moving thing shall be found here, shall "live here," shall come on and prosper, shall be the best of the kind, and shall increase greatly, so that there shall be "a very great multitude of fish, according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many." There shall be as great plenty of the river fish, and as vast shoals of them, as there is of salt-water fish, ver. 10. There shall be great numbers of Christians in the church, and those multiplying like fishes in the rising generations, and "the dew of their youth." In the creation, the "waters brought forth" the fish "abundantly," Gen. i. 20, 21, and they still live in and by the waters that produced them; so believers are "begotten by the word of truth," James i. 18, and "born by it," 1 Peter i. 23, that river of God, by it they live, from it they have their maintenance and subsistence; in the waters of the sanctuary they are as in their element, out of them they are as fish "upon dry ground;" so David was, when he thirsted and panted for God, for the living God. Where the fish are known to be in abundance, thither will the fishers flock, and there they will "cast their nets;" and therefore, to intimate their plenishing of these waters, and their being made every way useful, it is here foretold that the fishers shall stand upon the banks of this river, from "En-gedi," which lies on the border of the Dead Sea, to "En-eglaim," another city, which joins to that sea, and all along shall "spread their nets." The Dead Sea, which before was shunned as noisome and noxious, shall be frequented; gospel-grace makes those persons and places, which were unprofitable and good for nothing, to become serviceable to God and man. Trees were on the banks of this river; "many trees on the one side and on the other," ver. 7, made the prospect very pleasant and agreeable to the eye; the shelter of these trees also would be a convenience to the fishery. But that is not all; ver. 12, they "are trees for meat," and the "fruit" of them "shall not be consumed," for it shall produce fresh fruit "every month." The "leaf" shall be "for medicine," and it "shall not fade." This part of the vision is copied out into St. John's vision very exactly, Rev. xxii. 2, where, on either side of the river, is said to grow the "tree of life," which "yielded her fruit every month,' and "the leaves" were "for the healing of the nations." Christians are supposed to be these trees; ministers especially; "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord," Isa. lxi. 3, set by "the rivers of water," the waters of the sanctuary, Ps. i. 3, grafted into Christ the Tree of life, and, by virtue of their union with him, made trees of life too, "rooted" in him, Col. ii. 7. There is a great variety of these trees, through the diversity of gifts with which they are endued by that "one Spirit" who "works all in all." They grow on "the bank" of the river, for they keep close to holy ordinances, and through them derive from Christ sap and virtue. They are "fruit-trees," designed as the fig-tree and the olive, with their fruits to "honour God and man," Judges ix. 9.—Henry.

CHAP. XLVIII. NEW SCHEME OF TERRITORIAL DIVISION.—Ver. 1—29. In this distribution of the land we may observe, 1. That it differs very much from the division of it in Joshua's time, and agrees not with the order of their birth, or their blessing by Jacob or Moses. Simeon here is not divided in Jacob, nor is Zebulun a haven of ships; a plain intimation that it is not so much to be understood literally as spiritually; though the mystery of it is very much hidden from us. In gospel-times old things are passed away, "behold all things are become new." The Israel of God is cast into a new method. 2. That the tribe of Dan, which was last provided for in the first division of Canaan, (Josh. xix. 40,) is first provided for here. Thus in the gospel, the last shall be first, Matt. xix. 30. God, in the dispensations of his grace, does not follow the same method that he does in the disposals of his providence. But Dan had now his portion thereabouts where he had only one city before, northward, on the border of Damascus,

7 And by the border of Reuben, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for [1]Judah.

8 And by the border of Judah, from the east side unto the west side, shall be [k]the offering which ye shall offer of five and twenty thousand reeds[2] in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts, from the east side unto the west side: and [l]the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it.

9 The oblation[3] that ye shall offer unto the LORD shall be of five and twenty thousand in length, and of ten thousand in breadth.

10 And for them, even [m]for the priests, shall be this holy oblation; toward the north five and twenty thousand in length, and toward the west ten thousand in breadth, and toward the east ten thousand in breadth, and toward the south five and twenty thousand in length: [n]and the sanctuary of the LORD shall be in the midst thereof.

11 It shall be* for the priests that are sanctified of [o]the sons of Zadok, which have kept my [†]charge, which went not astray when the children of Israel went astray, [p]as the Levites went astray.

12 And this oblation of the land that is offered shall be unto them [q]a thing most holy, by the border of the Levites.

13 And over against the border of the priests[4] the Levites shall have [r]five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.

14 And [s]they shall not sell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the first-fruits of the land: [t]for it is holy unto the LORD.

15 ¶ And the five thousand, that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be [u]a profane place for the city; for dwelling and for suburbs: and the city shall be in the midst thereof.

16 And these shall be measures thereof;[5] the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length, over against the oblation of the holy portion, shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion; and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them [x]that serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city [y]shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel.[6] and furthest of all from the sanctuary, because that tribe had revolted to idolatry. 3. That all the ten tribes which were carried away by the king of Assyria, as well as the two tribes which were long after carried to Babylon, have their allotment in this visionary land; which some think had its accomplishment in the particular persons and families of those tribes which returned with Judah and Benjamin, of which we find many instances in Ezra and Nehemiah; and it is probable that there were returns of many more afterward at several times, which are not recorded; and the Jews having Galilee, and other parts that had been the possessions of the ten tribes, put into their hands, in common with them, they enjoyed them. Grotius says, If the ten tribes had repented, and returned to God; as the "chief fathers of Judah and Benjamin did, and the priests and Levites," Ezra i. 5, they should have fared as those two tribes did, but they forfeited the benefit of this glorious prophecy by sin. 4. That every tribe in this visionary distribution had its particular lot assigned it by a divine appointment; for it was never the intention of the gospel to pluck up the hedge of property, and lay all in common; it was in the way of charity, not of legal right, that the first Christians had all things common. 5. That the tribes lay contiguous; by the border of one tribe was the portion of another, all in a row, in exact order, so that, like stones in an arch, they fixed, and strengthened, and wedged in, one another. "Behold, how good and how pleasant a thing it is for brethren" thus "to dwell together!"

PROPORTIONS OF THE NEW CITY.—Ver. 30—35. Concerning this city, observe, 1. The measures of its outlets, and the grounds belonging to it, for its several conveniences; each way its appurtenances extended 4,500 measures, 18,000 in all. But what these measures were, is uncertain; it is never said, in all this chapter, whether so many reeds, as our translation determines, by inserting that word, each reed containing six cubits and a span, chap. xl. 5; and why should the measurer appear with the measuring-reed in his hand of that length, if he did not measure with that, except where it is expressly said he measured by cubits? Or whether, as others think, it is so many cubits, because those are mentioned, chap. xlv. 2, and chap. xlvii. 3. Yet that makes me incline rather to think that where cubits are not mentioned, it must be intended so many lengths of the measuring-reed. 2. The number of its gates; it had twelve gates in all, three on each side; which was very agreeable when it lay four-square; and these twelve gates inscribed to the twelve tribes. Because the city was to be served "out of all the tribes of Israel," ver. 19; it was fit that each tribe should have its gate; and Levi being here taken in, to keep to the number twelve, Ephraim and Manasseh are made one in Joseph. On the north side were the gates of Reuben, Judah, and Levi. On the east, the gates of Joseph, Benjamin, and Dan. On the south, the gates of Simeon, Issachar, and Zebulun. And on the west, the gates of Gad, Asher, and Naphtali. Conformable to this, in St. John's vision, the new Jerusalem (for so the holy city is called there, though not here) had "twelve gates," three of a side, and on them are written "the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel," Rev. xxi. 12, 13. Note, Into the church of Christ, both militant and triumphant, there is a free access by faith for all that come of every tribe, from every quarter. Christ has "opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers." Whoever will may come, and "take of the water of life," of the tree of life, "freely."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When true converts enter the church by faith in Jesus Christ, all their former sins are blotted out, every stigma is removed, all distinctions are swallowed up, and the vilest of them are admitted to a full participation of all the privileges of the children of God, and made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Yet on earth some of them must be placed more advantageously than others for their spiritual improvement; and in proportion to their degrees of grace and fruitfulness on earth, so will be their capacity for, and enjoyment of, the glory and felicity of heaven. —Our inheritance, as the spiritual priests of the living God, cannot be forfeited or exchanged: nor should we desire to change the temporal portion, which our gracious Lord hath allotted us. Especially it behoves the ministers of Christ to be contented in their places, and with such things as they have: and as they must by no means waste or alienate the revenues appropriated to the maintenance of religion; so the Lord will call those to a strict account, who plunder them, or make the concerns of religion to subserve their love of filthy lucre.—In the visible church on earth, there will still be some part profane; even believers must spend part of their time in those employments which do not immediately belong to religion; and though these must be performed from pious motives and in a conscientious manner, yet they should be kept distinct from spiritual concerns.—All that belong to the Israel of God should serve the common cause, in their proper places, and according to their abilities; and they who occupy themselves in so good a work, should not be left destitute of such things as are needful for them.—The way of access into the church is open on every side, that sinners may enter by faith, from all the quarters of the globe, and from all the tribes of the earth; and all that belong to the true church below, shall find at last admission into the holy city above; for all things are so regulated and established by the power, truth, and love of God, that no believer shall ever be ashamed of his confidence.—Through the whole extent of the church, even when it shall fill the earth, the Lord will vouchsafe his gracious presence and blessing. May we be found citizens of this holy city, and act consistently with that character; and have the benefit and comfort of the Lord's presence with us, in life, death, and for evermore.—Scott.

BOOK OF DANIEL.

THE writer of this book was contemporary with, but probably younger than, Ezekiel; yet he began to prophesy before him, and continued in his prophetical office much longer. He was of the royal family of Judah; and, having been early in life carried captive to Babylon, he soon became renowned for wisdom, and was advanced to great authority under Nebuchadnezzar: and he seems to have continued in an exalted station, and in offices of great trust and power, through the whole subsequent period of the Chaldean monarchy, and afterwards under Darius the Mede and Cyrus the Persian; yet he was all along more eminent for wisdom and piety than for rank and authority. Josephus, no doubt speaking the current opinion of his countrymen at that time, calls Daniel "one of the greatest of the prophets; for he was wont not only to foretel future things, as other prophets also did, but he likewise determined the time when they should come to pass." Our Lord called him "Daniel the prophet," with a special recommendation of his predictions, even the most difficult of them, to the attention of his disciples (compare viii. 13, ix. 27, xi. 31, xii. 11, with Matt. xxiv. 15, Mark xiii. 14). And there is such a coincidence between his prophecies and those of St John, "that the latter, in his Revelation, doth more distinctly unfold those events, which the former foretels in general terms."—MEDE. "But in his work hath been produced such instances of his having been a prophet, as an infidel cannot deny, or, if he denies, cannot disprove."—NEWTON.

CHAP. I.

Jehoiakim's captivity, 1. Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, refusing the king's meat, thrive upon pulse and water, 8.

IN the [a]third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

2 And [b]the LORD gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, [c]with part of the vessels of the house of God, which he carried into the land of [d]Shinar, to the house of his god; [e]and he brought the vessels into the treasure-house[1] of his god.

3 ¶ And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring [f]certain of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes;

4 Children [g]in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, [h]and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had [i]ability in them to stand in the king's palace, and whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.

5 And the king appointed them [k]a daily provision of the king's meat, and of the wine *which he drank: so nourishing them three years, that at the end thereof they might [l]stand before the king.

6 Now among these were, of the children of Judah, [m]Daniel,[2] Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah;

7 Unto whom [n]the prince of the eunuchs gave names:[3] for [o]he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteshazzar; and to [p]Hananiah, of Shadrach; and to Mishael, of Meshech; and to Azariah, of Abed-nego.

8 ¶ But Daniel [q]purposed in his heart that he would not [r]defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank; therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself.

9 Now [s]God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

10 And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, [t]I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink: for why should he see your faces [†]worse liking than the children which are of your [‡]sort? then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

11 Then said Daniel to [§]Melzar, whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, 12 Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us [‖]pulse to eat,[4] and water to drink.

13 Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat; and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days [u]their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh[5] than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink, and gave them pulse.

17 ¶ As for these four children, [x]God gave them [y]knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and *Daniel had [z]understanding in all visions and dreams.

18 Now, at the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them; and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: [a]therefore stood they before the king.

20 And [b]in all matters of [†]wisdom and understanding, that the king enquired of them, he found them [c]ten times better than all [d]the magicians and astrologers[6] that were in all his realm.

CHAP. I. DANIEL AND HIS COMPANIONS.—Ver. 3—7. It is evident, that Daniel and his companions were carried captive with Jehoiakim, though it be not here mentioned: for this was previous to the captivity of Jehoiachin.—The Eastern monarchs have in every age been accustomed to employ eunuchs in their palaces and about their persons; and as these frequently were advanced to the highest dignities; the original is sometimes used in general for a courtier, or officer in the palace. It is probable, however, that Daniel and his companions were eunuchs.—The master of the eunuchs, on this occasion, received orders from Nebuchadnezzar to select from the young men of Israel, and especially from those of royal and noble birth, such as were unblemished in their outward form, and of comely figure, who had good capacities, and had received the rudiments of a good education; and whose prudence, good sense, and learning, might render them fit to occupy some station at court. It was then, as well as at present, deemed a branch of magnificence, to be served by foreigners: perhaps the king had observed several of the young Jews to be very ingenious, and of promising abilities; and he desired to avail himself of the talents both of his native subjects, and of those whom he had acquired by conquest. These young men were to be instructed in the language and learning of the Chaldeans, and in every science that could qualify them for service. Three years were allotted to finish their education: and to encourage them to be diligent and obsequious, they were to be supplied with viands and wines every day from the king's own table. This education would tend, and probably was meant, to detach them from the interests of their people and religion, and to attach them to those of their new masters.—Amongst the number selected, there were four, more distinguished and conscientious than the rest: their names were all compounded with the original words for God, or Lord: Daniel signifying God my Judge; Hananiah, the grace of the LORD; and Azariah, the LORD is a help.—It is not agreed what Mishael signifies; but it is compounded with EL the name of God. But the master of the eunuchs changed these names for others compounded with the names of the idols of Babylon; as intimating the change he expected, or desired in their religion. The word rendered "children," is frequently used for young persons, when come to maturity; and it is the common opinion, that Daniel was at this time twenty years of age. Indeed, we must suppose, from the narrative, that both he and his companions were at least seventeen or eighteen.—As these young men were of the seed-royal, it is probable that some of them were descended from Hezekiah: and thus the prophecy, concerning his posterity, was exactly fulfilled.—Scott.

THEIR RELIGIOUS ABSTINENCE.—Ver. 8—16. Perhaps it was not in itself unlawful for them to "eat of the king's meat," or to "drink of his wine." But, 1. They were scrupulous concerning the meat, lest it should be sinful. Sometimes such meat would be set before them as was expressly forbidden by their law, as swine's flesh; or they were afraid lest it should have been offered in sacrifice to an idol, or blessed in the name of an idol. The Jews were distinguished from other nations very much by their meats; Lev. xi. 45, 46, and these pious young men, being in a strange country, thought themselves obliged to keep up the honour of their being a "peculiar people." Though they could not keep up their dignity as princes, they would not lose it as Israelites; for on that they most valued themselves. 2. They were jealous over themselves, lest, though it should not be sinful in itself, it should be an "occasion of sin" to them; lest, by indulging their appetites with these dainties, they should grow sinful and voluptuous, and in love with the pleasures of Babylon: they had learned David's prayer, "Let me not eat of their dainties," Ps. cxli. 4; and Solomon's precept, "Be not desirous of dainties, for they are deceitful meat," Prov. xxiii. 3; and accordingly they form their resolution. Note, It is very much the praise of all, and especially of young people, to be dead to the delights of sense, not to covet them, not to relish them, but to look upon them with indifference. Those that would excel in wisdom and piety, must learn betimes to "keep under the body, and bring it into subjection." 3. However, they thought it unseasonable now, when Jerusalem was in distress, and they themselves in captivity. They had no heart "to drink wine in bowls," so much were they "grieved for the affliction of Joseph." Though they had royal blood in their veins, yet they did not think it proper to have royal dainties in their mouths when they were thus brought low. Note, It becomes us to be humble under humbling providences.

THEIR INTELLECTUAL AND SPIRITUAL PROGRESS.—Ver. 17. Concerning Daniel and his fellows, we have here, 1. Their great attainments in learning. They were very sober and diligent, and studied hard; and we may suppose their tutors, finding them of an uncommon capacity, took a deal of pains with them, but, after all, their achievements are ascribed to God only: it was he that "gave them knowledge and skill in learning and wisdom;" for "every good and perfect gift is from above, from the Father of lights;" it is the Lord our God that "gives men power to get" this wealth; the mind is furnished only by him that formed it. The great learning which God gave these four children was, 1. A balance for their losses; they had, for the iniquity of their fathers, been deprived of the honours and pleasures that would have attended their noble extraction; but, to make them amends for that, God, in giving them learning, gave them better honours than those they had been deprived of. 2. A recompense for their integrity; they kept to their religion, even in the minutest instances of it, and would not so much as defile themselves with the king's meat or wine, but became, in wise men should be slain; [n]and they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.

14 ¶ Then Daniel [s]answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the captain of the king's guard, which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

15 He answered and said to Arioch the king's [t]captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired of the king[u] that he would give him time, and that he would shew the king the interpretation.

17 Then Daniel went to his house, and made the thing known to [x]Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions:

18 That they would desire mercies [*]of the God of heaven concerning this secret; that [†]Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

19 ¶ Then [c]was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered and said, Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: [f]for wisdom and might are his:

21 And [g]he changeth the times[5] and the seasons: [h]he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: [i]he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding:

22 He [k]revealeth the deep and secret things: [l]he knoweth what is in the darkness, [m]and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I [n]thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, [q]and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter.

24 ¶ Therefore Daniel went in unto [r]Arioch, whom the king had ordained to destroy the wise men of Babylon: he went and said thus unto him, [s]Destroy not the wise men of Babylon: bring me in before the king, and I will shew unto the king the interpretation.

25 Then Arioch [t]brought in Daniel before the king in haste, and said thus unto him, [‡]I have found a man of [§]the captives of Judah that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

26 The king answered and said to [u]Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, [x]Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded [y]cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, shew unto the king;

Perhaps, being terrified by his dream, he expected some sudden revolution; and he might even suspect them of having formed some bad designs against him; so that he supposed they waited till the time was changed, and the event had deprived him of the power of punishing them: but he was determined to know it directly, or to execute his barbarous intentions.—If they could discover the dream, it would give a sanction to their interpretation of it: but otherwise he should conclude them to be base impostors. The resolute conduct of the king led the Chaldeans and magicians, not only to confess the impotency of their arts, and to remonstrate that no king ever made such a demand on any who professed these sciences; but to declare that the discovery was beyond the reach of all human or created penetration, and only known and discoverable by the gods, whose dwelling was not with flesh, or among men. This they spake of their gods: but the only living and true God, who alone could reveal the secrets contained in this dream, indeed condescends to dwell among men; and he actually made known the dream to Daniel, and so showed the difference betwixt JEHOVAH and his prophets, and the idols and magicians of Babylon. —Scott.

PRAYER OF DANIEL AND HIS FRIENDS.—Ver. 18. Daniel was particular in this prayer, but had an eye to, and a dependence upon, the general mercy of God; "that they would desire mercies of the God of heaven concerning this secret." We ought in prayer to look up to God as the "God of heaven," a God above us, and who has dominion over us, to whom we owe adoration and allegiance, a God of power, who "can do every thing." Our Saviour has taught us to pray to God as "our Father in heaven." And whatever good we may pray for, our dependence must be upon the "mercies of God" for it, and an interest in those mercies we must desire; we can expect nothing by way of recompense for our merits, but all as the gift of God's mercies. They desired mercy "concerning this secret." Note, Whatever is the matter of our care, must be the matter of prayer; we must desire mercy of God concerning this thing and the other thing, that occasions us trouble and fear. God gives us leave to be humbly free with him, and in prayer to enter into the detail of our wants and burthens. "Secret things belong to the Lord our God," and, therefore, if there be any mercy we stand in need of, that concerns a secret, to him we must apply ourselves.—Henry.

THE IMAGE.—Ver. 38—39. The Chaldean monarchy, over which Nebuchadnezzar was the only king of great renown, was represented in the vision by "the head of gold;" for monarchies under a succession of princes of the same nation, and not individual monarchs,

28 But there is [z]a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and [l]maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be [b]in the latter days.[6] Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these;

29 (As for thee, O king, thy thoughts *came into thy mind upon thy bed what should come to pass hereafter; and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass:

30 But as for me, [d]this secret is not revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more than any living, but for [†]their sakes that shall make known the interpretation to the king, [f]and that thou mightest know the thoughts of thy heart.)

31 ¶ Thou, O king, [‡]sawest, and behold a great image. This great image,[7] whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee, [g]and the form thereof was terrible.

32 This image's [l]head was of fine gold, his [k]breast and his arms of silver, his [l]belly and his [§]thighs of brass, 33 His [m]legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay.

34 Thou sawest till that a stone was [o]cut out [l]without hands, [p]which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.

35 Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that [r]no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image [s]became a great mountain, [t]and filled the whole earth.

36 ¶ This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king.

37 Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for [y]the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

38 And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven, hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. [b]Thou art this head of gold.

39 And after thee shall arise [c]another kingdom inferior to thee,[8] and [d]another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth.

40 And [e]the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things; and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

41 And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay.

42 And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay; so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly *broken.

43 And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave [†]one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay.

44 And in [‡]the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, [h]which shall never be destroyed: and the [§]kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall [l]break in pieces[9] and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever.

45 Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain [l]without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; [l]the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass *hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.

46 ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar [m]fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation [n]and sweet odours unto him.[10]

47 The king answered unto Daniel, and said, Of a truth it is, that your God is [o]a God of gods, and [p]a Lord of kings, and [q]a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldest reveal this secret.

48 Then the king made Daniel a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him [s]ruler over the whole province of Babylon,[11] [t]and chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon.

49 Then Daniel requested of the king, and [u]he set Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, over the affairs of the province of Babylon: but Daniel [x]sat in the gate of the king.

are meant by kings in the general language of prophecy. The vast riches, magnificence, and prosperity of the Chaldean monarchy, and of Babylon its renowned metropolis, gave it that pre-eminence over the succeeding empires, which gold has above other metals: perhaps more liberty and peace were enjoyed under it, than under those which followed. "The head" of the image, being the emblem of this monarchy, seems only to denote its priority in order of time: but the term of its continuance was far shorter than that of any of the others. Some make the Assyrian empire, as swallowed up in the Chaldean, to be included under this part of the vision; but that was past, and therefore not the proper subject of prophecy.—The transient dream which so soon vanished and was forgotten, and the lifeless image, were both emblems of the emptiness and vanity of all earthly glory. The breast, and the two arms of silver of the image, represented that monarchy which succeeded to the Chaldean; and this was the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, the united power and authority of which might be denoted by the two arms, shoulders, &c.—This was inferior to the Chaldean monarchy, as silver is to gold, perhaps in wealth, splendour, and prosperity; at least it was so in the characters of the kings; for the Persian monarchs, from the death of Cyrus to the subversion of the monarchy, were perhaps as vile a set of men as ever disgraced human nature.—The third kingdom, represented by the belly and thighs of the image formed of brass, must be that of the Macedonians, or Grecians, which succeeded to the Persian monarchy. This was established by the conquests of Alexander the Great, and continued under his successors. It had less external magnificence than those which preceded; and it was founded and supported by force of arms, many of which were anciently made of brass: but it was more extensive than either of the others, including many dominions in Europe, as well as those of the Persians in Asia and Africa, and many regions further to the east, than they had ever penetrated. It was therefore foretold, that this kingdom would bear rule over all the earth; which may also allude to the vain-glorious boast of Alexander, that he had subdued the whole world.—"The Persians were not inferior in dignity, power, and riches; but were worse, touching ambition, cruelty, and all kind of vice; showing that the world would grow worse and worse, till it was restored by Christ." Ver. 40—43. These verses evidently describe the Roman empire, as succeeding to that of the Macedonians. It was as strong as iron, and like iron it brake and subdued all before it. No people ever made such extensive conquests, through so many ages, as the Romans did: in the former part of their prosperity, they were remarkable only for valour, hardiness, frugality, and poverty, of which iron is a proper emblem. The two consuls by which they were long governed, and the eastern and western empires, into which their dominions were at length divided, might be denoted by the two legs and feet on which the image stood; and the ten toes, into which the feet divided, represented the ten kingdoms into which at length the whole empire was broken. The civil wars which weakened the state, and the conjunction of the Romans with the conquered nations, and afterwards with the Goths, Vandals, and other barbarians who subverted the empire, was denoted by the compounding of the iron with the potter's clay, which cannot unite or strengthen each other. Thus the Roman empire decayed in strength, even when it was growing more extensive: at length it began evidently to decline, till it was divided into many subordinate kingdoms. This is also represented by the Romans, mingling themselves with the seed of men, or of other nations, by alliances and intermarriages, which tended to the subversion of the empire. Yet this monarchy still subsists in the toes, or kingdoms into which it was broken, and of which we shall hereafter have occasion to speak more particularly. "The chief power in these ten kingdoms shall be partly secular, and partly ecclesiastical: and the encroaching of the ecclesiastical power upon the secular, shall be the occasion of frequent clashings between them, to the weakening of both parties, and endangering their breaking to pieces." [Lowth.]—These four monarchies, (probably the mightiest which ever appeared on earth,) have certainly been far more celebrated than any others. The history of them, in fact, comprises the grand transactions of mankind from the days of Daniel to this present time. The church of God likewise has had vastly more concern with these, than with any other empires; the countries belonging to them have hitherto been the chief seat of the Redeemer's kingdom, which will be rendered universal by the total subversion of the last of them.

THE NEW KINGDOM.—Ver. 44, 45. In the days of those kings, or during the prevalence of the Roman authority, the God of heaven had determined to set up another kingdom, which would never be destroyed, or fall under the power of any conquerors; seeing it would break in pieces, and consume all these kingdoms, and stand for ever. This was represented by "a stone cut out without hands," which smote the image and utterly destroyed it, and became a great mountain that filled the whole earth. The stone was entirely distinct from the image, nay, directly opposite to it and all its interests: it must therefore mean a kingdom set up by the power of God, without the concurrence of human policy or force, and in opposition to all the authority and combined efforts of the princes of this world.—Scott.

CHAP. III. THE IMPIOUS DECREE.—Ver. 1—7. It is not certain at what time the events of this chapter occurred. The Septuagint indeed says, that it was in the eighteenth year, that is, after Nebuchadnezzar's prophetical dream. Some think that Nebuchadnezzar had a reference in this image to that which he had seen; as if he would have one 17 If it be so, [u]our God whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace; and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king.

18 But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

19 ¶ Then [y]was Nebuchadnezzar *full of fury, and the form of his visage was changed against Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego: therefore [a]he spake, and commanded that they should heat the furnace [b]one seven times more than it was wont to be heated.

20 And he commanded the †most mighty men that were in his army [d]to bind Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, and to cast them into the burning fiery furnace.

21 Then these men were bound in their ‡coats, their hosen, and their §hats, and their other garments, and were cast into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

22 Therefore because the king's [l]commandment was urgent, and the furnace exceeding hot, the *flame of the fire slew those men [4] that took up Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego.

23 And these three men, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, [f]fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace.

24 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was [g]astonied, and rose up in haste, and spake, and said unto his †counsellors, Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the king, True, O king.

25 He answered and said, Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and ‡they have no hurt; [5] and the form of the fourth is like [l]the Son of God.

26 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the §mouth of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, [k]ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, came forth of the midst of the fire.

27 And [m]the princes, governors, and captains, and the king's counsellors, being gathered together, saw these men, [n]upon whose bodies the fire had no power, [o]nor was an hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them. [6]

28 Then Nebuchadnezzar spake, and said, [p]Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, who hath sent his [q]angel, and delivered his servants [r]that trusted in him, and have changed the king's word, and yielded their bodies that they might not serve nor worship any god, except their own God.

Probably it was either an enclosed building, with an opening large enough to admit a full view of it, or an uncovered building, an enclosure of fire, or an area surrounded by a wall, within which the fire raged; so that Nebuchadnezzar, still seated on his throne, might see the persons in the fire.—Calmet.

The Furnace—Ver. 24—27. When the three children were cast bound in the midst of that devouring fire, we might well conclude that we should hear no more of them, that their very bones would be calcined; but, to our amazement, we here find that Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego are yet alive. 1. Nebuchadnezzar finds them walking in the fire; "He was astonished and rose up in haste." Perhaps the slaying of the men that executed his sentence, was that which astonished him, as well it might, for he had reason to think his own turn would be next; or it was some unaccountable impression upon his own mind that "astonished" him, and made him "rise up in haste," and go to the furnace, to see what was become of those he had cast into it. In his astonishment he calls his counsellors about him, and appeals to them whether "we did not cast three men bound into the fire." It seems, it was done by order, not only of the king, but of the council. They durst not but concur with him, which he forced them to do, that they might share with him in the guilt and odium; "True, O king," say they; "we did order such an execution to be done, and it was done." "But now" (says the king,) "I have been looking into the furnace, and 'I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire.'" 1. They were "loosed" from their bonds; the fire that did not so much as singe their clothes, burnt the cords wherewith they were tied, and set them at liberty: thus God's people have their hearts enlarged, through the grace of God, by those very troubles with which their enemies designed to straiten and hamper them. 2. They "had no hurt," made no complaint, felt no pain or uneasiness in the least: the flame did not scorch them, the smoke did not stifle them, they were alive, and as well as ever, in the midst of the flames. See how the God of nature can, when he pleases, control the powers of nature, to make them serve his purposes. Now was fulfilled, in the letter, that gracious promise, Isa. xliii. 2, "When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." By faith they "quench the violence of the fire, quench the fiery darts of the wicked." 3. They "walked in the midst of the fire;" the furnace was large, so that they had room to walk; they were unhurt, so that they were able to walk; their minds were easy, so that they were disposed to walk, as in a paradise or garden of pleasure. "Can a man walk upon hot coals, and his feet not be burnt?" Prov. vi. 28. Yes, they did it with as much pleasure as the king of Tyrus

Nebuchadnezzar's dream, 1; Daniel interpreteth it, 10; the story of the event, 28.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king, [a]unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; [b]Peace be multiplied unto you.

2 *I thought it good to shew the signs and wonders [c]that the high God hath wrought toward me.

3 How [d]great are his signs! and how mighty are his wonders! [e]his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion is from generation to generation.

4 ¶ I Nebuchadnezzar [f]was at rest[1] in mine house, and flourishing in my palace:

5 I saw [g]a dream which made me afraid, and the thoughts upon my bed, and the visions of my head, troubled me.

6 Therefore [h]made I a decree to bring in all the wise men of Babylon before me, that they might make known unto me the interpretation of the dream.

7 Then came in the magicians, the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers: and I told the dream before them; [i]but they did not make known unto me the interpretation thereof.

8 But at the last Daniel came in before me, (whose name was [k]Belteshazzar, according to the name of my god, [l]and in whom is the spirit of the holy gods,)[2] and before him I told the dream, saying,

9 O Belteshazzar, [m]master of the magicians, because I know that [n]the spirit of the holy gods is in thee, and [o]no secret troubleth thee, [p]tell me the visions of my dream that I have seen, and the interpretation thereof.

10 Thus were the visions of mine head in my bed: I *saw, and behold [q]a tree[3] in the midst of the earth, and the height thereof was great.

11 The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof [r]reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth.

12 The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all: [s]the beasts of the field had [t]shadow under it, and [u]the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw [x]in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold, [y]a watcher and [z]an holy one came down from heaven;

14 He cried †aloud, and said thus, [a]Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches; shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit; [b]let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches.

15 Nevertheless, [c]leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts in the grass of the earth.

19 ¶ Then [n]Daniel (whose name was Belteshazzar) [o]was astonied for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake, and said, Belteshazzar, [p]let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, My lord, [q]the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.

20 The [r]tree that thou sawest,[5] which grew, and was strong, whose height reached unto the heaven, and the sight thereof to all the earth:

21 Whose leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and upon whose branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation:

22 It is [s]thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for [t]thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth.

23 And whereas the king [u]saw a watcher and an holy one coming down from heaven, and saying, Hew the tree down, and destroy it; [6] yet leave the stump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and [x]let his portion be with the beasts of the field, till seven times pass over him;

"walked up and down in the midst of his stones of fire," his precious stones that sparkled as fire, Ezek. xxviii. 14. 4. There was a fourth seen with them in the fire, whose form, in Nebuchadnezzar's judgment, was "like the Son of God;" he appeared as a Divine Person, a Messenger from heaven, not as a Servant, but as a Son. "Like an angel;" (so some;) and angels are called "sons of God," Job xxxviii. 7. But some think it was the eternal Son of God, the Angel of the covenant, and not a created angel. He "appeared" often in our nature before he "assumed" it for good and all: and never more seasonably, nor to give a more proper indication and presage of his great errand into the world in the fulness of time, than now, when, to deliver his chosen out of the fire, he came and walked with them in the fire. Note, Those that suffer for Christ, have his gracious presence with them in their sufferings, even in the fiery furnace, even in the valley of the shadow of death, and therefore even there they need "fear no evil."—Henry.

CHAP. IV. The Royal Dream—the Great Tree.—Ver. 10—18. As the king lay asleep, he dreamed that he saw a tree, in the centre of the earth, (conceiving of it as of a wide extended plain;) of so enormous a height and size, that its top reached to heaven, and it was visible to the extremity of the earth. This tree was covered with an exuberance of beautiful leaves, and loaded with immense quantities of fruit; its branches formed a covert for the beasts of the field, and places for the nests of the fowls of the air, and all the inhabitants of the earth fed upon its fruit. This represented the exceedingly prosperous condition of Nebuchadnezzar, the height of his exaltation, the extent of his dominions and renown, the splendour of his kingdom, the multitude of his subjects who received protection from him, and the peace and plenty which they enjoyed under his administration. He then saw a watcher and a holy One, either a holy angel, or a divine person, who was called a watcher, as watching over the affairs of men, ver. 23, 24, who spake with great authority and energy, and as one giving orders to his servants, to hew down the tree, &c.; yet, when the branches, leaves, and fruit should be destroyed or scattered, and the beasts and fowls driven away, the stump of the tree was to be preserved in the earth, as if girt round with iron and brass, being overgrown with grass, and wet with the dew of heaven. Here a transition was made from the tree, to Nebuchadnezzar, who was represented by it; the tree being lost sight of, a person came in its stead; (as the imagination in dreams frequently passes from one thing to another, in a wild and incoherent manner.) This person was represented as living on the grass of the field, as wetted with the dew of heaven, as having his portion with the beasts; and as having lost the heart or disposition of a man; being estranged from the pursuits, employments, and manners of life peculiar to the human species, and fitted to associate with the beasts of the field. Thus he would continue, till seven times or years passed over him; and then this condition would be terminated, and he restored to his former capacities and situation. All this would take place by the decree of the watchers, and by the demand of the holy ones, which some understand of the holy angels, the ministers of Providence; who obtain from God this decree, and commission to carry it into execution, for the manifestation of the Divine glory in abasing this proud man. Others by "holy ones" understand the saints of God, true believers, in answer to whose earnest prayers for deliverance from oppression, this decree was made. But some think that the "Holy, Holy Holy Lord God of hosts," the triune Jehovah, was meant by the watchers and the holy ones; and indeed Daniel's interpretation gives great sanction to this opinion: as he says that "this was the decree of the most high," ver. 23, 24. By his appointment this event would take place, and be notified to all that lived on the earth, that they might know that the most high was the ruler in the kingdom of men; that he was above the mightiest monarchs, and disposed of them and their dominions as he pleased: and that he frequently placed over them the meanest and basest of men.

Its Interpretation.—Ver. 20—26. The application of the dream to Nebuchadnezzar was very obvious. He was the flourishing tree; which in various respects was emblematical of his power, fame, wealth, and prosperity. The hewing down also of this tree, with the circumstances attending it, showed his loss of these advantages, through that judgment of God that was coming upon him: for being smitten with a most extraordinary madness, and becoming for a time like a brute, he would be utterly incapable of all the functions of government; and being consequently set aside, others would assume the direction of public affairs: and no remedy being found for his malady, and he discovering in every thing the propensities of an animal, he would be driven from the dwellings of men, and left to associate with the beasts, feeding with them upon grass, and exposed, without shelter or covering, to the inclemencies of the weather. This would continue for seven times, or years; till at length he would be made to know, that the most high ruled in the kingdom of men, and gave it to whom he pleased.—It is observable, that Daniel omitted the last expression used by the king; "And setteth up over it the basest of men;" thinking perhaps the application mortifying enough without repeating it.—He also showed him, that the kingdom would be ensured to him, after he was convinced, that however high any of the kings of the earth might be exalted, the heavens, or the God of heaven, alone ruled with independent and absolute authority.—This dream and its interpretation would become known in the court of Nebuchadnezzar; and as Daniel was in great authority there, when the former part of it received so remarkable an accomplishment, he would use his influence to lead all parties con-

24 This is the interpretation, O king, and this is [y]the decree of the most High, which is come upon my lord the king:

25 That they shall [z]drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and they shall wet thee with the dew of heaven, and seven times shall pass over thee, till thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26 And whereas they commanded to leave the stump of the tree roots; thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.

27 Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and [f]break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a *lengthening of thy tranquillity.

28 ¶ All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.

29 At the end of twelve months, he walked [†]in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon.

30 The king spake, and said, Is not this [m]great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?

31 While the word was in the king's mouth, there [q]fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; [r]The kingdom is departed from thee:

32 And they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field: they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, [t]until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

33 The same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar; and he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws.[7]

34 And at the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven,[8] and mine understanding returned unto me, and [x]I blessed the most High, and I praised and honoured [b]him that liveth for ever, *whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation:

35 And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: [c]and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and [f]none can stay his hand, or say unto him, [g]What doest thou?

36 At the same time my reason returned unto me: and, for the glory of my kingdom, mine honour and brightness returned unto me: and my counsellors and my lords sought unto me; and I was established in my kingdom, and excellent majesty was added unto me.

37 Now I Nebuchadnezzar praise, and extol, and honour the King of heaven, [m]all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase.

BELSHAZZAR the king [a]made a great feast to a thousand[1] of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

2 Belshazzar, whiles he tasted the wine, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which his *father[2] Nebuchadnezzar had [†]taken out of the temple which was in Jerusalem; that the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines, might [c]drink therein.

3 Then they brought the golden vessels that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king and his princes, his wives and his concubines, drank in them.

4 They drank wine, and praised the gods [e]of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

5 ¶ In [f]the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and [s]wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace; and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote.

6 Then [h]the king's *countenance [†]was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, [k]so that the [‡]joints of his loins were loosed, [l]and his knees smote one against another.

7 The king cried [§]aloud [m]to bring in the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers. And the king spake, and said to the wise men of Babylon, Whosoever shall read this writing, and shew me the interpretation thereof, shall [n]be clothed with [‖]scarlet,[3] and have a chain of gold about his neck, and shall be [o]the third ruler in the kingdom.

8 Then came in all the king's wise men: [p]but they could not read the writing, nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof.

9 Then was king Belshazzar greatly troubled, and his *countenance was changed in him, and his lords were astonied.

The plain interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's case, stripped of the prophetic figurative language, appears to be, that he should be punished with madness—should fancy himself a beast, and live like a beast, but after some time should recover his reason, and resume the government. —NEWTON.

[8] The first indication of the recovery is noted by a reverse of the cause of the fall. At the expiration of the term, or at the end of seven years, Nebuchadnezzar lifted up his eyes unto heaven, and his understanding or mind returned; he acknowledged against whom he had transgressed by his pride, and looked up unto Him when he was restored. The following acts of praise are the suitable returns of a mind truly penitent, and deeply sensible of its faults, and of the mercies it had received.—WINTLE.

cerned to expect the fulfilment of the latter part also; and thus God wonderfully inclined their hearts to wait for that event, managing the affairs of the empire by a regency, and not advancing any other person to the throne; that it might be open for Nebuchadnezzar's restoration, when he recovered the use of his rational powers.—Scott.

ITS FULFILMENT.—Ver. 31—33. When Nebuchadnezzar was strutting, and vaunting himself, and adoring his own shadow, "while the" proud "word was in the king's mouth," the powerful word came from heaven, by which he was immediately deprived, 1. Of his honour as a king; "The kingdom is departed from thee." When he thought he had erected impregnable bulwarks for the preserving of his kingdom, now, in an instant, it is "departed from him;" when he thought it was so guarded, that none could take it from him, behold, it departs of itself. As soon as he becomes utterly incapable to manage it, it is of course taken out of his hands. 2. He is deprived of his honour as a man; he loses his reason, and by that means loses his dominion; "They shall drive thee from men." And it was fulfilled; he was "driven from men the same hour." On a sudden he fell stark mad, distracted in the higest degree that ever any man was. His understanding and memory were gone, and all the faculties of a rational soul, broken so that he became a perfect brute in the shape of a man. He went naked, and on all four, like a brute; did himself shun the society of reasonable creatures, and run wild into the fields and woods; and was driven out by his own servants, who, after some time of trial, despairing of his return to his right mind, abandoned him, and looked after him no more. He had not the spirit of a beast of prey, (that of the royal lion,) but the abject and less honourable species, for he was made to "eat grass as oxen;" and, probably, he did not speak with human voice, but lowed like an ox. Some think that his body was all covered with hair; however, "the hair" of his head and baird, being never cut or combed, grew like "eagles' feathers," and "his nails like birds' claws." Let us pause a little, and view this miserable spectacle; and let us receive instruction from it. (1.) Let us see here what a mercy it is to have the use of our reason, how thankful we ought to be for it, and how careful we ought not to do any thing which may either provoke God, or may have a natural tendency to put us "out of the possession of our own souls." Let us learn how to value our own reason, and to pity the case of those that are under the prevailing power of melancholy or distraction, or are delirious, and to be very tender in our censures of them and conduct toward them, for it is a temptation common to men, and a case which, some time or other, may be our own. (2.) Let us see here the vanity of human glory and greatness; Is this Nebuchadnezzar the Great? What, this despicable animal, that is meaner than the poorest beggar? Is this he that looked so glorious on his throne, so formidable in the camp, that had politics enough to subdue and govern kingdoms, and now has not so much sense as to keep his own clothes on his back? "Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms?" Isa. xiv. 16. Never let the "wise man" then "glory in his wisdom," or "the mighty man in his strength." (3.) Let us see here how God "resists the proud," and delights to abase them, and put contempt upon them. Nebuchadnezzar would be "more than a man," and therefore God justly makes him "less than a man," and puts him upon a level with the beasts, that set up for a rival with his Maker.—Henry.

THE KING'S DELIVERANCE.—Ver. 34—37. At the end of the predicted season, Nebuchadnezzar was suddenly restored to the perfect use of his reason. He lifted up his eyes to heaven, as a rational creature, and in adoration of the glorious majesty of God, who there reigned over all the kings of the earth: and, (instead of raging like a wild bull in a net, as so proud a man under so mortifying a dispensation would have been apt to do,) he blessed and praised the most high God; acknowledging the justice, wisdom, and mercy of his dealings with him; thanking him for sparing and recovering him; and giving him honour and worship, as the living and true God, the universal, almighty, and everlasting Sovereign; in comparison of whom all the inhabitants of the earth, even the mightiest monarchs and conquerors, are reputed as nothing; who doeth according to his own will both in the glorious armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and as none can withstand his power, or defeat his counsels; so none may find fault with any thing he doeth, or call him to account; seeing he hath an unalienable right to do what he will, and cannot deviate from the most perfect wisdom, justice, truth and goodness. —Scott.

CHAP. V. BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST.—Ver. 1—4. Belshazzar signifies, Bel is his riches; he was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, and not his immediate successor. He reigned seventeen years; and was all that while engaged in unsuccessful war with Cyrus and the Medes and Persians, having succeeded to it along with his kingdom. Cyrus had driven the Chaldean armies out of the field, and at this time besieged Babylon: but the king and people, confiding in their impregnable fortifications, the abundance of provisions stored up in the city, and the extent of cultivated lands within the walls, derided his attempts. Cyrus had already formed his plan, and had privately made preparation for draining off the waters of the Euphrates into adjacent lakes and reservoirs; that he might march his army on its channel into the city; and he waited for this feast as the proper time for the execution of his design. It was a stated festival, probably observed in honour of some idol, on which it was customary for the people of all ranks to give a full loose to their appetites, in every kind of indulgence: and Cyrus reasonably expected on that occasion to find them off their guard, and in the utmost confusion; nor was he thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed:

11 There is a man in thy kingdom in whom is the spirit of the holy gods; and in the days of thy *father, [x]light and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him; whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy [†]father, the king, I say, thy father, made master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans, and soothsayers;

12 Forasmuch as [z]an excellent spirit, [a] and knowledge, and understanding, [‡]interpreting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and [§]dissolving of [‖]doubts,[5] were found in the same Daniel, [b]whom the king named Belteshazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will shew the interpretation.

13 Then was Daniel brought in before the king. And the king spake, and said unto Daniel, Art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my *father brought out of [d]Jewry?

14 I have even heard of thee, [e]that the spirit of the gods is in thee, and that light and understanding and excellent wisdom is found in thee.

15 And now the wise men, the astrologers, have been brought in before me, that they should read this writing, and make known unto me the interpretation thereof: but they could not shew the interpretation of the thing:

16 And I have heard of thee, that thou canst [†]make interpretations, and dissolve doubts: now, if thou canst read the writing, and make known to me the interpretation thereof, [g]thou shalt be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck, and shalt be the third ruler in the kingdom.

17 ¶ Then Daniel answered[6] and said before the king, [h]Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy [‡]rewards to another; yet I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.

18 O thou king, the most high God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honour:

19 And for the majesty that he gave him, all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive, and whom he would he set up, and whom he would he put down.

20 But [m]when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened *in pride, he was [†]deposed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him:[7]

21 And [n]he was driven from the sons of men; and [‡]his heart was made like the beasts, and his dwelling was with the wild asses: they fed him with grass like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; [o]till he knew that the most high God ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth over it whomsoever he will.

22 And thou his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this;

23 But hast [s]lifted up thyself against [t]the Lord of heaven; and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou and thy lords, thy wives and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them: and thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, [x]which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God [y]in whose hand thy breath is, [z]and whose are all thy ways, [a]hast thou not glorified.

24 Then [b]was the part of the hand sent from him; and this writing was written.

25 ¶ And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.

26 This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God [c]hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.

27 TEKEL; [d]Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.

28 PERES;[8] [e]Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.

29 Then commanded Belshazzar, and they [f]clothed Daniel with scarlet,[9] and put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation concerning him, that he should be the third ruler in the kingdom.

30 ¶ In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain.

31 And [h]Darius the Median took the kingdom, *[being [†]about threescore and two years old.

disappointed. For, regardless of so potent and vigilant an enemy at the gates, Belshazzar set his subjects the example of riot and excess, and they copied it. He entertained a thousand of his nobles at his own table, and it was considered as a great condescension that he would eat and drink with them; for these princes did not generally mix with their subjects. Whilst they were thus regaling themselves with generous wines, he proposed to fetch the sacred vessels of the temple to drink out of, in contempt of JEHOVAH and his worshippers.—The seventy predicted years of the captivity, from Jehoiakim's first reduction, drew near to an end; and Belshazzar might intend this to show his disregard of the prophecies respecting the restoration of the Jews. The vessels seem hitherto to have remained unmolested in the treasury of the temple of Belus: some indeed think that they had been dedicated to that idol, and used in his worship; but this does not appear from the history. Belshazzar, however, at this time determined to appropriate them to his own use, and to pollute them by idolatry and intemperance. For whilst the company drank out of these sacred vessels, they celebrated the praises of their images, which were mere lifeless gold, or silver, &c.; probably singing songs of their pretended exploits, and to their honour; pouring out libations to them; and ascribing all the victories of their ancestors and the greatness of their city to their assistance; especially praising them as the authors of their success against the worshippers of JEHOVAH.—Scott.

THE WRITING ON THE WALL ILLEGIBLE TO THE MAGI.—Ver. 5—9. There appeared the "fingers of a man's hand, writing on the plaster of the wall," before the king's face; the angel Gabriel, say the Rabbins, directing these fingers, and writing by them. "That divine hand" (says a rabbin of our own, Dr. Lightfoot) "that had written the two tables for a law to his people, now writes the doom of Babel and Belshazzar upon the wall." Here was nothing sent to frighten them, which made a noise, or threatened their lives; no claps of thunder, or flashes of lightning; no destroying angel with his sword drawn in his hand; only a pen in the hand, writing upon the wall, "over against the candlestick," where they might all see it by the light of their own candle. Note, God's written word is sufficient to put the proudest, boldest sinners into a fright, when he is pleased to give it the setting on. The king saw "the part of the hand that wrote," but saw not the person whose hand it was, which made the thing more frightful. The wise men of Babylon are immediately called in, to see what they can make of this writing upon the wall. The king "cried aloud," as one in haste, as one in earnest, to bring the whole college of magicians; to try if they can "read this writing," and "show the interpretation of it:" for the king and all his lords cannot pretend to it, it is out of their sphere; the study of divine revelation, (such as they had, or thought they had,) and converse with the world of spirits, were by the heathen confined to one profession, and none other meddled with it; but what is written to us by the finger of God, is legible to all; whoever will, may read the mind of God in the Scriptures.—Henry.

THE QUEEN-MOTHER.—Ver. 10—12. The queen, here spoken of, was not the queen-consort, as Belshazzar's wives and concubines were present at the feast; but the queen-mother Nitocris, the widow of Evil-merodach, the son of Nebuchadnezzar and the father of Belshazzar, is generally supposed to be meant. She was a woman of great capacity and reputation: and her active and prudent management had been for some time the chief stay of the empire. She had not attended this riotous banquet; but hearing the tidings of the hand-writing, she came into the room; and, after the customary salutation, exhorted the king to resume his courage, and not to yield to terror or despondency; for though the wise men of Babylon could not read the writing, he had a man in his kingdom who could. And she observed, that if he were called, he would certainly read and interpret the hand-writing.

INTERPRETATION AND FULFILMENT OF THE WRITING.—Ver. 25—31. The literal meaning of the words written seems to be: "He hath numbered, He hath numbered; He hath weighed, and they divide it." This Daniel interpreted to signify, that God had certainly numbered the years or days of the Chaldean monarchy, and of Belshazzar's life, and they were now fully accomplished: the measure of his days was finished, and that of his iniquity was filled; so that God would no more spare him. Tekel, He hath weighed; this signified, that the king was weighed in the impartial balances of divine justice, and found deserving of the deepest condemnation; as base metal and counterfeit money are detected by the scales, being weighed and found deficient. Peres is the same as Upharsin, without the prefix and the determination, and signifies they divide it; but the similarity between Peres, and the original word for Persians, seems also referred to; and it was therefore interpreted to mean, that his kingdom was taken from him, and given to the Medes and Persians, who would possess it between them. It is remarkable, that Daniel never exhorted Belshazzar to repentance, for he knew that his doom was fixed. Whilst these things were transacting in the palace, two divisions of Cyrus's army had marched on the channel of the river into the city, from each end of it, and finding the gates of brass, intended to bar the entrance from the river into the streets, left open, through the carelessness and intoxication of the besieged; they met and marched into the heart of the city without opposition, and surprised the palace before the alarm was given. So that having broken in and slain Belshazzar, and proclaimed peace and safety to all who laid down their arms; a general submission followed, and the city was taken, and the empire reduced, almost without further bloodshed.—Scott.

sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords;[5] that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.

18 ¶ Then the king went to his palace, and passed the night fasting: neither were [s]instruments of musick brought before him; [k]and his sleep went from him.

19 Then the king arose very early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions.

20 And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel: and the king spake and said to Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, [m]is thy God, whom thou servest continually, [o]able to deliver thee from the lions?

21 Then said Daniel unto the king, O king, live for ever.

22 My God hath sent his angel, [r]and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me: forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me; and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.

23 Then was the king exceeding glad for him, and commanded that they should take Daniel up out of the den. So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, [x]because he believed in his God.

24 ¶ And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions, them, their children, and their wives: and [a]the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den.[6]

25 ¶ Then king Darius wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; [c]Peace be multiplied unto you.

26 I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men [e]tremble and fear before the God of Daniel; [f]for he is the living God, and stedfast for ever, [h]and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end.

27 He deliv[e]reth and rescueth, [k]and he worketh signs and wonders in heaven and in earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the *power of the lions.

28 So this Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of Cyrus the Persian.[7]

Thus, though he himself lived great in Babylon, yet he testified his concurrence with the meanest of his brethren the captives in remembering Jerusalem, and preferring it before his "chief joy," Ps. cxxxvii. 5, 6. 6. He did this "three times a-day," three times every day, according to the example of David, Ps. lv. 17, "Morning, evening, and at noon, I will pray." It is good to have our hours of prayer, not to bind, but to mind, conscience. 7. He did this so openly and avowedly, that all who knew him knew it to be his practice; and he thus showed it, not because he was proud of it, (in the place where he was there was no room for that temptation, for it was not reputation, but reproach, that attended it,) but because he was not ashamed of it. Though Daniel was a great man, he did not think it below him to be thrice a-day upon his knees before his Maker, and to be his own chaplain; though he was an old man he did not think himself past it, nor though it had been his practice from his youth up, was he weary of this well-doing. —Henry.

THE LION'S DEN.—Ver. 18—23. No doubt Daniel spent a far more pleasant night among the lions, whilst employed in fervent prayer, and admiring, grateful praise, than either the king or his malicious persecutors. As for the former, he was so grieved, and ashamed of his folly, so affected with the consideration of having cast his faithful servant into the den of lions, and so anxious about the event; that he spent the night fasting, and without any of his ordinary recreations, nor could he close his eyes to sleep. And as soon as the morning allowed him, he repaired to the den, having yet some hope that Daniel had been miraculously preserved. The decree having been now complied with, we may suppose, that he ordered the stone to be removed; and then, through fear and conscious misconduct, he dolefully ventured to speak to Daniel, as if yet alive; inquiring whether the living God, whom he served continually, had shown himself able to deliver him. Some indeed think that he saw Daniel before he spake, but the contrary seems more probable; and his expectation of a miracle shows, that he had strong convictions of the power of Israel's God, though worldly motives retained him among the worshippers of idols. To this inquiry, Daniel, being safe and easy both in body and mind, answered with the utmost composure, without any complaint of unkindness, but with a respectful expression of his good-will.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. FOUR BEASTS—FOUR EMPIRES.—Ver. 4—8. The Chaldean empire, as advanced to its summit of prosperity under Nebuchadnezzar, and as declining under Belshazzar, was intended by the first beast. The lion was an emblem of Nebuchadnezzar's

2 Daniel spake, and said, I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

3 And [s]four great beasts came up from the sea,[1] diverse one from another.

4 The first was [t]like a lion,[2] and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof [k]were plucked, [‡]and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, [m]and a man's heart was given to it.

5 And, behold, another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up [§]itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it: and they said thus unto it, [o]Arise, devour much flesh.

6 After this I beheld, and lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the [r]night-visions, and, behold, a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; [t]and it had ten horns.

8 I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were [x]eyes like the eyes of man, and [y]a mouth speaking great things.

9 ¶ I beheld [z]till the thrones were cast down, and [a]the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: [c]his throne was like the fiery flame, [d]and his wheels as burning fire.

10 A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: [f]thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: [g]the judgment was set, and the books were opened.[3]

11 I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake: I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

12 As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet *their lives were prolonged for a season and time.

13 I saw in the night-visions, and, behold, [l]one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to [m]the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him.

14 And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, [p]that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is [q]an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

The second was like a bear, the Persian empire, which occasioned much slaughter. Sir Isaac Newton supposes that the three tusks signify the three parts—Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt—which it conquered. The third, like a leopard, with wings and four heads, was the Macedonian, which Alexander founded. The wings represented the rapidity of his conquests, and the four heads the division of his empire into four kingdoms, under Cassander, Symmachus, Ptolemy, and Seleucus. The fourth was represented by a terrible beast, &c., but its form is not described. This was the Roman empire. — BOOTHROYD.

17 These [u]great beasts, which are four, are four kings,[4] which shall arise [x]out of the earth.

18 But the saints of the [‡]most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever.

19 Then I would know the truth of [z]the fourth beast, which was diverse from all [§]the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet;

20 And [a]of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, [b]whose look was more stout than his fellows.

21 I beheld, and [c]the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;

22 Until [d]the Ancient of days came, and [e]judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.

23 Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be [f]the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.

24 And [g]the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first,[5] and he shall subdue three kings.

25 And he [l]shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws:[6] and they shall be given into his hand, until [m]a time and times and the dividing of time.

26 But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

27 And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, [p]whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, [q]and all [‖]dominions shall serve and obey him.

28 Hitherto is the end of the matter. As for me Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart.

courage and success in acquiring the dominion over his neighbours; and perhaps of his superior generosity and magnanimity, with which he ruled over the nations. The eagle's wings denoted the rapidity and unabated vigour with which he prosecuted his victories. But as the prophet saw this, he observed, "that the wings thereof were plucked." After the death of Nebuchadnezzar, the Chaldeans made no more conquests. Whilst Daniel beheld how the first beast was weakened, he saw another beast come up out of the sea, to subvert and supplant him. This represented the kingdom of the Medes and Persians. Its emblem was "a bear;" less noble and courageous, but more voracious and savage than a lion. This beast raised up itself on one side; for the Medes and Persians extended their conquests almost wholly to the west of their own countries: or, "it raised up one dominion," that is, the Medes and Persians united to form one kingdom; or the Persians, who were the inferior people, would acquire the chief dominion. It had also three ribs between its teeth; this is interpreted of the three kingdoms of Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt, which the Persians conquered, and grievously oppressed; thus taking the prey as it were, out of the mouth of the Chaldeans. This bear having disappeared, the prophet saw an extraordinary leopard rise up in its stead. This was the emblem of the Grecian or Macedonian empire, which for the time was the most renowned in the world. It was erected by Alexander the Great on the ruins of the Persian monarchy, and it continued in four divisions under his successors. The leopard, being exceedingly fierce and swift, represented that kingdom, and especially Alexander its founder. But the swiftness of a quadruped was not an adequate emblem of the rapidity with which he made his conquests; as he subdued nations more speedily than others could march their armies through them. The leopard had therefore four wings of a fowl upon his back.—When Alexander died, his kingdom was, after many contests among his captains, divided into four parts, Egypt, Syria, Macedonia, and Thrace, with some regions of Asia Minor. This fourth beast evidently accords with the legs and feet of iron, which were seen by Nebuchadnezzar in his visionary image, and which were at length divided into ten toes. It far exceeded in power, fierceness, and destructive rage, all that had gone before it, as well as in the extent and long duration of its dominions: and no animal could be found so terrible and furious, as to lend it a suitable name. This was doubtless an emblem of the Roman state, the invincible fortitude, hardiness, and force of which, perhaps were never equalled. By wars and conquests, the Romans bare down all opposition, and reduced almost every kingdom or state in the known world into some kind or degree of dependence; drew all the spoil and wealth of many conquered nations, to enrich their prond capital; and tyannized over all that did not quietly yield obedience to their authority.

THE ANCIENT OF DAYS.—Ver. 9—14. The prophet continued to contemplate the scene, till at length all these thrones were cast down: and the Ancient of days, or the eternal God, who existed before time was, even from everlasting, was emblematically represented as placed on his throne. "His garment white as snow," was the emblem of his most perfect justice and holiness; "the hair of his head like the pure wool," denoted his unerring wisdom and awful majesty; "his throne like the fiery flame," signified his terrible vengeance on the wicked; and "his wheels" (on which it was fixed as a chariot,) "as burning fire," showed that his providence would execute the awful sentence of his justice on his enemies. This was also denoted, and its terror illustrated, by "the fiery stream that came forth from before him." An immense multitude of angels ministered unto him: and unnumbered millions of his creatures were gathered before his tribunal: for the judgment was set, and the books were opened; the book of his law, and of these prophecies, and the register of the offences of the criminals to be judged, &c.

THE MYSTIC HORN—POPERY.—Ver. 23—27. The monstrous power of the church and bishop of Rome hath been far more different from every other species of tyranny, than the Roman empire was from all other monarchies; and this power subdued three of the ten kingdoms. This little horn would "speak great things against the most High;" and let it be noted how much stress is laid on this circumstance: and we have noticed, and shall have frequent occasion to mention, some of the blasphemous and impious words of the Roman Antichrist. He would also "wear out the saints of the most High." The persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes were only for a few years; whereas those of the pope and his instruments have continued through many centuries; and, though now somewhat suspended, are probably not terminated; so that their duration and severity have worn out the saints of God, more than any other ever did.—He would also think, or devise "to change times and laws." It could not be considered as any thing very singular for a king to alter the laws in his own dominions, or as to secular matters; and no change greatly for the worse could be made in the religious laws and customs of the idolatrous nations: but that the little horn should presume to change the laws respecting religion, (not excepting the laws of God,) and this through the dominions of the other ten horns, as well as in his own petty kingdom, would be wonderful indeed! But the close connection of this little horn with the other ten horns; its influence over them, and their destruction, as well as his, in consequence of this connection, evidently shows, that this was what the prophet beheld with astonishment. And hath not the papal power arrogated the prerogative of making times holy or unholy, contrary to the word of God? He hath commanded men everywhere to abstain from meat, and cease from work, when God required no such thing; and has multiplied his holy days, till scarcely four of the ANTIOCHUS.—Ver. 22—26. Now observe here, of Antiochus, 1. His character; He shall be a "king of fierce countenance," insolent and furious, neither fearing God nor regarding man; "understanding dark sentences," or, rather, "versed in dark practices," the "hidden things of dishonesty;" he was master of all the arts of dissimulation and deceit, and knew the "depths of Satan" as well as any man. He was "wise to do evil." 2. His success; he shall make dreadful havoc of the nations about him; "His power shall be mighty," bear down all before it, but not "by his own power," but partly by the assistance of his allies, Eumenes and Attalus, partly by the baseness and treachery of many of the Jews, even of the priests that came into his interests, and especially by the divine permission; it was not by his own power, but by a power given him from above, that he "destroyed wonderfully," and thought he made himself a great man by being a great destroyer. 3. The methods by which he will gain this success; not by true courage, wisdom, or justice, but by his "policy" and "craft," by fraud and deceit, and serpentine subtlety; He shall "cause craft to prosper." 4. The mischief that he shall do to religion; "He shall magnify himself in his heart," and think himself fit to prescribe and give law to every body, so that he shall "stand up against the Prince of princes," against God himself; he will profane his temple and altar, prohibit his worship, and persecute his worshippers. See what a height of impudence some men's impiety brings them to; they openly bid defiance to God himself, though he is the King of kings. 5. The ruin that he shall be brought to at last; "He shall be broken without hand," without the hand of man; he shall not be slain in war, nor shall he be assassinated, as tyrants commonly were, but he shall fall into the hands of the living God, and die by an immediate stroke of his vengeance. He, hearing that the Jews had cast the image of Jupiter Olympius out of the temple, where he had placed it, was so enraged at the Jews, that he vowed he would make Jerusalem "a common burying-place," and determined to march thither immediately: but no sooner had he spoken these proud words, than he was struck with an incurable plague in his bowels, worms bred so fast in his body, that whole flakes of flesh sometimes dropped from him, his torments were violent, and the stench of his disease such, that none could endure to come near him. He continued in this misery very long: at first, he persisted in his menaces against the Jews, but, at length, despairing of his recovery, he called his friends together, and acknowledged all

CHAP. IX.

Daniel confessing his sins, 3, prayeth for the restoration of Jerusalem, 16. Gabriel informeth him of the seventy weeks, 20.

IN the first year of Darius the son of Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, *which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans;

2 In the first year of his reign, I Daniel understood [b]by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years[1] in the desolations of Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And *I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, [f]with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes:

4 And I prayed unto the LORD my God, and [g]made my confession, and said, O Lord, [h]the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments;

5 We [i]have sinned,[2] and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments:

6 Neither have we hearkened unto thy servants the prophets, which spake in thy name to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land.

7 O Lord, [n]righteousness [t]belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day; to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and unto all Israel, that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither thou hast driven them, because of their trespass that they have trespassed against thee.

8 O Lord, [q]to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, [r]because we have sinned against thee.

9 To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, [s]though we have rebelled against him;

10 Neither have we obeyed the voice of the LORD our God, to walk in his laws, [u]which he set before us by his servants the prophets.

11 Yea, [x]all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore [y]the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him.

12 And he hath [z]confirmed his words, which he spake against us, and against our judges that judged[3] us, by bringing upon us a great evil: for [b]under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem.

13 As it is written in the law of Moses, all this evil is come upon us: [d]yet [t]made we not our prayer before the LORD our God, *that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth.

14 Therefore hath the LORD [f]watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for [g]the LORD our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth: for we obeyed not his voice.

15 And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast [g]gotten thee renown, as at this day; we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 ¶ O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain: because for our sins, and [m]for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and *cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate, [q]for the Lord's sake.

18 O my God, [r]incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city [l]which is called by thy name: for we do not *present our supplications before thee for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies.

19 O Lord, hear; [t]O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for [x]thine own sake, O my God: [y]for thy city and thy people are called by thy name.

20 ¶ And whiles I was speaking, and praying, and [a]confessing my sin and the sin of my people Israel, and presenting my supplication before the LORD my God [b]for the holy mountain of my God;[4]

21 Yea, whiles I was speaking in prayer, even [c]the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly [†]swiftly, [e]touched me about the time of the evening oblation.

22 And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to [‡]give thee skill and understanding.

23 At the beginning of thy supplications the [§]commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee; for thou art [‖]greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision.

24 Seventy weeks are determined[5] upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to [*]finish the transgression, and to [†]make an end of sins, and [m]to make reconciliation for iniquity, and [n]to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and [‡]prophecy, [p]and to anoint the most Holy.

25 Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment those miseries to have fallen upon him for the injuries he had done to the Jews, and his profaning the temple at Jerusalem; then he wrote courteous letters to the Jews, and vowed that if he recovered, he would let them have the free exercise of their religion. But, finding his disease grow upon him, when he could no longer endure his own smell, he said, "It is meet to submit to God, and for man which is mortal not to set himself in competition with God;" and so died miserably in a strange land, on the mountains of Pacata near Babylon: so Usher's Annals, A.M. 3840, about 160 years before the birth of Christ.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. DANIEL'S PRAYER.—Now, observe, 1. The intenseness of his mind in this prayer; "I set my face unto the Lord God to seek him;" which denotes the fixedness of his thoughts, the firmness of his faith, and the fervour of his devout affections, in the duty. We must, in prayer, set God before us, and set ourselves as in his presence; to him we must "direct our prayer," and must "look up." Probably, in token of his setting his face toward God, he did, as usual, set his face toward Jerusalem, to affect his own heart the more with the "desolations" of it. 2. The mortification of his body in this prayer; in token of his deep humiliation before God for his own sins, and the sins of his people, the sense he had of his unworthiness, when he prayed he "fasted," put on "sackcloth," and lay in "ashes," the more to affect himself with the desolations of Jerusalem, which he was praying for the repair of, and to make himself sensible that he was now about an extraordinary work.—Henry.

THE ANSWER.—Ver. 24—27. We have in this and the following verses, one of the most undeniable prophecies of Christ, and of his coming and salvation, that is found in the whole Old Testament: and they contain the true reason why the Jews hesitate to call Daniel a prophet; as this prediction demonstrates that Jesus was the promised Messiah, and that they are guilty of the most obstinate unbelief, in expecting another Messiah, so many centuries after the time fixed for his coming, and after the actual accomplishment of the other parts of the same prophecy. There are, however, difficulties in expounding the passage, which have occasioned a variety of opinions among commentators; who all agree in the great outlines. It is universally allowed, that the seventy weeks here mentioned, mean seventy weeks of years, or what would be equivalent to seventy returns of the sabbatical year; that is, four hundred and ninety years. This period was determined, or decided on; and during this term the Jews would enjoy the peculiar privileges of God's people; and Jerusalem being rebuilded, would retain the name of the holy city; but about the expiration of these years, a sacrifice would be offered, making effectual atonement for sin, superseding the necessity of the repeated legal sacrifices and sin-offerings; as well as for the reconciliation and sanctification of the true people of God: an "everlasting righteousness," would also be introduced, for the complete justification of every believer: the time allotted for the law and the prophets would expire; the kingdom of God would be preached; and all the visions and prophecies of the Scriptures concerning Christ would receive their accomplishment in this Holy One of God, being anointed by the Holy Ghost, and in all respects perfected and exalted as the Messiah. The former verse gives a general view of the subject, but these are more particular. The prophet was called on to observe and understand, that "from the going forth of the commandment to restore Jerusalem, unto the Messiah, would be seven weeks, and sixty-two weeks;" during the seven weeks the streets and walls of the city would be rebuilded, amidst much opposition, and in very turbulent times; and "after" the expiration of the sixty-two weeks, (making sixty-nine in all,) or in the seventieth week, the Messiah would be cut off by a violent death, but not for any offence of his own: and then the people of a prince that should come, would destroy both Jerusalem and the temple, and bear down all before them like a deluge of waters; for "unto the end" of that war "desolations" of the most dreadful kind "were determined upon."—Scott.

THE SEVENTY WEEKS.—Ver. 24. The difficulties that arise about these seventy weeks, are, 1. Concerning the time when they commence, and whence they are to be reckoned. They are here dated "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," ver. 25. I should most incline to understand this of the edict of Cyrus, mentioned, Ezra i. 1, for by it the people were "restored;" and though express mention be not made there of the building of Jerusalem, yet that is supposed in the building of the temple, and was foretold to be done by Cyrus; Isa. xliv. 28. He shall "say to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." That was, both in prophecy and in history, the most famous decree for the building of Jerusalem; nay, it should seem, this "going forth of the commandment," (which may as well be meant of God's command concerning it as of Cyrus's,) is the same with that going forth of the commandment mentioned, ver. 23, which was "at the beginning of Daniel's supplications." And it looks very graceful, that the seventy weeks should begin immediately upon the expiration of the seventy years. And there is nothing to be objected against this, but that by this reckoning the Persian monarchy, from the taking of Babylon by Cyrus to Alexander's conquest of Darius, lasted about 130 years; whereas by the particular account given of the reigns of the Persian emperors, it is computed that it continued 220 years. So Thucydides, Xenophon, and others reckon. Those who fix it to that first edict, set aside these computations of the heathen historians as uncertain, and not to be relied upon, as others

CHAP. X.

Daniel having humbled himself, seeth a vision, 1; being troubled with fear, he is comforted by an angel, 10.

IN the third year of [a]Cyrus king of Persia a thing was revealed unto Daniel, whose name was called Belteshazzar; and the thing was true, [d]but the time appointed was *long: and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision.

2 In those days I Daniel was mourning three full weeks.

3 I [g]ate no [†]pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, [h]neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled.

4 And in the four and twentieth day of the first month, [i]as I was by the side of the great river, which is [k]Hiddekel;[1]

5 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, [l]and behold [‡]a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of [•]Uphaz:

6 His body also was like the beryl, and [q]his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and [r]his arms and his feet like in colour to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.

7 And I Daniel [t]alone saw the vision: for the men that were with me saw not the vision; [u]but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves.

8 Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my [§]comeliness was [z]turned in me into corruption, and I retained no strength.

9 Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard the voice of his words, then [a]was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my face toward the ground.

[1] This verse should be joined with the last of the preceding chapter —"There is no one that supporteth me in these things but Michael your prince, whom I, in the first year of Darius the Mede, stood to confirm and to strengthen." —Boothroyd.

An angel comforteth him.

10 ¶ And, behold, [b]an hand touched me, which [‖]set me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands:

11 And he said unto me, O Daniel, a man *greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee, and stand [†]upright: for unto thee am I now sent. And when he had spoken this word unto me, I stood trembling.

12 Then said he unto me, [f]Fear not, Daniel; for [g]from the first day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and [h]to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words.

13 But [i]the prince of the kingdom of Persia[2] withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, [k]Michael, [‡]one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

14 Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people [l]in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

16 And, behold, one [o]like the similitude of the sons of men [p]touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision [q]my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

17 For how can [§]the servant of this my lord [r]talk with this my lord? for as for me, straightway there remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me.

18 Then there came again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me, 19 And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee; [s]be strong, yea, be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, [z]Let my lord speak; for [a]thou hast strengthened me.

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? and now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, [c]the prince of Grecia[3] shall come.

21 But I will shew thee that which is noted [d]in the scripture of truth: and there is none that [‖]holdeth with me in these things, but Michael your prince.

ALSO I,[1] [a]in the first year of Darius the Mede, even I, stood to confirm and to strengthen him.

willing to reconcile them, begin the 490 years, not at the edict of Cyrus, Ezra i. 1, but at the second edict for the building of Jerusalem, issued out by Darius Nothus above 100 years after, mentioned Ezra vi. Others fix on the seventh year of Artaxerxes Mnemon, who sent Ezra with a commission, Ezra vii. 8—12. The learned Mr. Poole, in his Latin Synopsis, has a vast and most elaborate collection of what has been said, pro and con, concerning the different beginnings of these weeks, with which the learned may entertain themselves. 2. Concerning the period of them; and here likewise interpreters are not agreed. Some make them to end at the death of Christ, and think the express words of this famous prophecy will warrant us to conclude, that from this very hour when Gabriel spake to Daniel, at the time of the evening oblation, to the hour when Christ died, which was towards evening too, it was exactly 490 years; and I am willing enough to be of that opinion.—Henry.

Chap. X. Vision of Christ.—Ver. 5, 6. That glorious Person whom Daniel saw in vision, could be no other than Christ himself, the eternal Word; He was by the side of the river Hiddekel, probably walking there, not for diversion, but devotion and contemplation, as Isaac walked in the field, to meditate; and, being a person of distinction, he had his servants attending him at some distance. There he "looked up," and saw "one Man," one alone, "a certain Man," even "the Man Christ Jesus;" it must be he, for he appears in the same resemblance wherein he appeared to St. John in the isle of Patmos, Rev. i. 13—15. His dress was priestly, for he is the high priest of our profession, "clothed in linen," as the high priest himself was on the day of atonement, that great day; "his loins were girded" (in St. John's vision his "paps" were "girded) with a golden girdle," of the finest gold, that of Uphaz, for every thing about Christ is the best in its kind. The "girding of the loins" denotes his ready and diligent application to his work as his Father's servant, in the business of our redemption. His "shape" was "amiable, his body like the beryl," a precious stone of a sky-colour; his "countenance" was "awful," and enough to strike a terror on the beholders, for his face was "as the appearance of lightning," which dazzles the eyes, both "frightens" and "threatens;" his "eyes" were bright and sparkling, "as lamps of fire;" his "arms and feet" shone "like polished brass." His "voice" was loud and strong, and very piercing, "like the voice of a multitude."—Henry.

Prophetic Communication.—Ver. 20, 21. The angel next inquired whether Daniel well understood for what purpose he came to him. Thus reminding him, that he was sent to instruct him concerning the things which would befall his people; but when he had executed this commission, he would return back, and continue to counteract the devices of the Persian kings against the Jews, even till that monarchy should terminate; by which means many fatal effects would be prevented, and many troubles averted. And when that commission was executed, the prince of Grecia would come, or the Macedonian empire under Alexander and his successors would be established, and the chief danger and trouble to the Jews would arise from that quarter. But he would proceed more fully to open and enlarge upon the prophecies of the former Scriptures to the same effect; or rather to show what was written in the book of God's secret purposes, of which all prophecies are as an abstract.—"God's decrees are spoken of, as if they were committed to writing, and registered in a book." [Lowth.] But Daniel might be assured that he had not one friend in the court of Persia, who would concur with the angel, to forward the prophet's designs in behalf of his people, but Michael their prince: and that he must depend on him alone to disappoint the devices which were forming against them.—This forms the introduction to the prophecies in the next chapters, which were not proposed as emblems, but in plain language. A great deal is advanced by respectable expositors on these verses, about tutelary and guardian angels, presiding over different countries, as if they strove one against another, each for his favourite country. This may indeed consist with either paganism or popery, but it is utterly incompatible with Christianity. The passage is allowed to be difficult: but perhaps careful consideration may allow the interpretation above given to be satisfactory. Daniel was chief president in Persia; yet not one of the princes or counsellors of that empire cordially united with him in doing good to the Jews: he must therefore look above to Michael their Prince, and his mighty angels, who would at length effect a revolution, by turning the dominion from Persia to Greece, which would be more favourable to the Jews than Persia in after times was.—Scott.

Chap. XI. Alexander's Conquests.—Ver. 2—4. "The memorable events, which were revealed to Darius, in the vision of the ram and the he-goat, are here again more clearly and explicity revealed, in his last vision, by an angel: so that this latter prophecy may, not improperly, be said to be a comment and explanation of the former." [Bp. Newton.]—The three kings of Persia, here mentioned, were Cambyses the son of Cyrus, Smerdis the Magian who falsely pretended to be another of his sons, and Darius Hystaspis, who married Cyrus's daughter. Xerxes the son of this Darius was the fourth king in Persia after Cyrus, who having inherited or acquired immense riches beyond conception, stirred up all his subjects and allies to invade Greece. For this expedition he collected the largest army that is read of in history, consisting, of all sorts, of more than five millions of men; besides the Cartha-

2 And now will I shew thee [b]the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet [c]three kings in Persia;[2] and the fourth shall be far richer than they all: [d]and by his strength through his riches he shall [e]stir up all against the realm of Grecia.

3 And [f]a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and [g]do according to his will.

4 And when [h]he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, [i]and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall [k]be plucked up, even for others besides those.

5 ¶ And the [l]king of the south[3] shall be strong, [m]and one of his princes;[4] and he shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion.

6 And in the end of years they shall *join themselves together; for the king's daughter of the south shall come to the [n]king of the north to make [t]an agreement: but she shall not retain the power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm: but she shall be given up, and they that brought her, and [‡]he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times.

7 But out of a branch of her roots shall one [o]stand up in his estate, which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of the king of the north, and shall deal against them, [p]and shall prevail;

8 And shall also carry captives into Egypt [q]their gods, with their princes, and with [§]their precious vessels of silver and of gold; and he shall continue more years than the king of the north.

9 So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.

10 But his sons shall be [‖]stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one shall certainly come, [r]and overflow, and pass through; then shall he return, and be stirred up, even [s]to his fortress.

11 And the [‖]king of the south shall be [u]moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he shall set forth a great multitude; but [x]the multitude shall be given into his hand.

12 And when he hath taken away the multitude, [y]his heart shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many ten thousands: but he shall not be strengthened by it.

13 For [z]the king of the north shall return, and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former, and shall certainly come *after certain years with a great army, and with much riches.

14 And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south: also [†]the robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall fall.

15 So the king of the north shall come, and [b]cast up a mount, and take the [‡]most fenced cities; and the arms of the south [c]shall not withstand, neither [§]his chosen people, neither shall there be any strength to withstand.

16 But he that cometh against him [d]shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him; and he shall stand in the [‖]glorious land, which by his hand shall be consumed.

17 He shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and *upright ones with him; thus shall he do: and he shall give him the daughter of women, [†]corrupting her; but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.

18 After this shall he turn his face unto the isles,[5] and shall take many: but a prince [‡]for his own behalf shall cause [§]the reproach offered by him to cease; without his own reproach he shall cause it to turn upon him.

19 Then he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land: [‖]but he shall stumble, and fall, and not be found.

20 Then shall stand up in his [‖]estate *a raiser of taxes in the glory of the kingdom: but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in [†]anger, nor in battle.

21 And in his [‡]estate shall stand up [k]a vile person,[6] to whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom: but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries.

22 And [m]with the arms of a flood[7] shall they be overflown from before him, and shall be broken; yea, [n]also the prince of the covenant.

23 And after the league made with him he shall work deceitfully: for he shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people.

24 He shall enter [§]peaceably even upon the fattest places of the province; and he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers' fathers: [p]he shall scatter among them the prey, and spoil, and riches: yea, and he shall [‖]forecast his devices against the strong holds, even for a time.

25 And he shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south with a great army; and the king of the south shall be stirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army; but he shall not stand: for they shall forecast devices against him.

26 Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him, and his army shall overflow; and many shall fall down slain.

ginians, and others, whom he excited to war against the Grecians in other quarters. But though this tremendous invasion exceedingly wasted Greece; yet it was resisted by a very small number of the inhabitants, with the most determined valour, and the most decided success. The Persian troops were shamefully routed and dispersed, incredible numbers perished, and Xerxes returned home in disgrace, and almost unattended. This was one of the most memorable expeditions recorded in history; and it gave rise to those long wars, and that inveterate hatred, betwixt the Grecians and Persians, which ended in the subversion of the Persian empire by Alexander. So that the prophecy, touching upon the principal events, passes over the nine subsequent Persian kings to the time of Alexander, as less worthy of notice; and contrasts his successful expedition against Persia, with Xerxes' unsuccessful invasion of Greece. Alexander is here called "a mighty king, that should stand up, and rule, with great dominion, and do according to his will;" which implies not only his extensive conquests and absolute authority; but his capricious tyranny, which cost some of his most faithful followers their lives, when they ventured to oppose his inclinations. But when he had acquired the summit of success, power, and renown, he was suddenly cut off, as we have seen; and his dominions were divided into four parts, not to his posterity, but his captains.—Scott.

ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES—HIS ELEVATION.—Ver. 21—25. By a trick he got his elder brother's son, Demetrius, to be sent a hostage to Rome, in exchange for him, contrary to the cartel; and his elder brother being made away with by Heliodorus, ver. 20, he took the kingdom. The states of Syria did not "give it him," because they knew it belonged to his elder brother's son, nor did he get it by the sword, but "came in peaceably," pretending to reign for his brother's son, Demetrius, then a hostage at Rome. But with the help of Eumenes and Attalus, neighbouring princes, he gained an interest in the people, and "by flatteries obtained the kingdom," established himself in it, and crushed Heliodorus, who made head against him "with the arms of a flood;" they that opposed him, were "overflown" and "broken before him:" even "the prince of the covenant," his nephew, the rightful heir, whom he pretended to "covenant with," that he would "resign" to him whenever he should return. But "after the league made with him, he shall work deceitfully," as one whose avowed maxim it is, that princes ought not to be bound by their word any longer than it is for their interest. And with "a small people," that at first cleave to him, he shall "become strong," and "he shall enter peaceably upon the fattest places" of the kingdom of Syria, and, very unlike his predecessors, shall "scatter" among the people the "prey, and the spoil, and riches," to insinuate himself into their affections; but at the same time, he shall "forecast his devices against the strong holds," to make himself master of them, so that his generosity shall last but for a time; when he has got the garrison into his hands, he "will scatter his spoil" no more but rule by force; as those commonly do, that come in by fraud. He that comes in "like a fox," reigns "like a lion."

HIS PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.—Ver. 28. 1. He had a rooted antipathy to the Jews' religion; "His heart" was "against the holy covenant." And, ver. 30, "he had indignation against the holy covenant;" that covenant of peculiarity by which the Jews were "incorporated" a people distinct from all other nations, and dignified above them. 2. He carried on his malicious designs against the Jews by the assistance of some perfidious apostate Jews. He kept up "intelligence with them that forsook the holy covenant," ver. 30, some of the Jews, that were false to their religion, and introduced the customs of the heathen, with whom they made a covenant. See the fulfilling of this, 1 Macc. i. 11—15, where it is expressly said concerning those renegado Jews, that they "made themselves uncircumcised, and forsook the holy covenant." We read, 2 Macc. iv. 9, of Jason, the brother of Onias the high priest, who by the appointment of Antiochus set up a school at Jerusalem, "for the training up of youth in the fashions of the heathen;" and 2 Macc. iv. 23, &c., of Menelaus, who fell in with the interests of Antiochus, and was the man that helped him into Jerusalem, now in his last return from Egypt. We read much in the book of Maccabees of the mischief done to the Jews by these treacherous men of their own nation, Jason and Menelaus, and their party. These upon all occasions he made use of; "such as do wickedly against the covenant," such as throw up their religion, and comply with the heathen, he shall "corrupt with flatteries," to harden them in their apostacy, and to make use of them as decoys to draw in others, ver. 32. 3. He profaned the temple; "Arms stand on his part," ver. 31, not only his own army which he now brought from Egypt, but a great party of deserters from the Jewish religion that joined with them; and they "polluted the sanctuary of strength," not only the holy city, but the temple. The story of this we have, 1 Macc. i. 21, &c. He "entered proudly into the sanctuary," took "away the golden altar, and the candlestick," &c. And therefore, ver. 25, "there was a great mourning in Israel; the princes and elders mourned," &c. And, 2 Macc. v. 15, &c. "Antiochus went into the most holy temple, Menelaus, that traitor to the laws, and his own country, being his guide." Antiochus having resolved to bring all about him to be of his religion, "took away the daily sacrifice," ver. 31. 4. He persecuted those who retained their integrity. Though there were many who "forsake the covenant," and "do wickedly" against it, yet there is a people who do "know their God," and retain the knowledge of him, and "they shall be strong, and do exploits," ver. 32; when others yields to the tyrant's demands, and surrender their consciences to his impositions, they bravely keep their ground, resist the CHAP. XII. MICHAEL.—Ver. 1. Michael signifies, Who is like God; and this name with the title of "the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people," most clearly points out the divine Saviour; and cannot properly be understood of a created angel. If the words "at that time," be referred to Antiochus's persecution, Christ stood up in his providence, merely to deliver the Jews from their persecutors; if to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, his standing up may be understood of his incarnation, for the redemption of his people, and of the introduction of the gospel-dispensation, just before those calamities began: but if we interpret "at that time," to refer to the ruin of the eastern and western Antichrists, as just before predicted; then Christ will stand up in his glorious power, to terminate the afflictions of his people, and to make his cause triumphant over all opposition.

THE RESURRECTION.—Ver. 2—3. The awaking of those, "that sleep in the dust," is very different from "the resurrection of the souls," mentioned by St. John, and the language so accords with that of the New Testament respecting the general resurrection, that it must be expounded of it as the closing event of all, when "that which is determined shall be done."—The word rendered many, may signify the multitude, &c.; or if we retain our translation, we may consider it as similar to that of St. Paul, "by one man's disobedience, many were made sinners." No doubt, then, the resurrection of the dead, the day of judgment, and the eternal state of retribution are here predicted; and that everlasting shame and contempt, as well as torment and misery, which will be the lot of the wicked. But besides the happiness of the righteous, which is mentioned in general terms, those things are added which seem restrictively to mark our faithful ministers. They are wise, both for their own salvation, and to win souls; wise teachers of divine truth, "and shall shine as the brightness of the firmament." "They turn many unto righteousness," or justify many; teaching them the way, in which sinners are justified and sanctified by faith in Christ; and in recompense of their diligence and faithfulness, they shall be "as stars for ever and ever."—Scott.

THE BOOK OF HOSEA.

Hosea, whose prophecy we now enter upon, exercised his sacred office for a great many years. He predicted the captivity of the ten tribes long before it arrived, yet he probably lived to witness its near approach. He is supposed to have been of the kingdom of Israel, though his prophecies frequently relate to Judah also. His style is remarkably concise, sententious, and unconnected, though some parts are peculiarly pathetic, animated, and sublime. Considering the brevity of this prophecy, few parts of the Old Testament are more fully attested, by quotations, or clear references, in the New (comp. i. 10, 11 and ii. 23 with Rom. ix. 25, 26, 1 Pet. ii. 10; vi. 6 with Matt. ix. 13; x. 8 with Luke xxiii. 30, Rev. vi. 16; xi. 1 with Matt. ii. 15; xiii. 14 with 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55).

CHAP. I.

Hosea, to shew God's judgment for spiritual whoredom, taketh Gomer, 1, and hath by her Jezreel, &c., 4.

THE word of the Lord that came unto [b]Hosea the son of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, king of Israel.

2 The [c]beginning of the word of the Lord by Hosea.[1] And the Lord said to Hosea, Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms: [h]for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lord.

3 So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim; which conceived, and bare him a son.

4 And the Lord said unto him, [k]Call his name Jezreel; for yet a little while, and I will [*]avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel.

5 And it shall come to pass at that day, that I will break the bow[2] of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.

6 ¶ And she conceived again, and bare a daughter. And God said unto him, Call her name [†]Lo-ruhamah: for I will [‡]no more have mercy upon the house of Israel; [§]but I will utterly take them away.

7 But [r]I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and [s]will save them by the Lord their God,[3] and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen.

8 ¶ Now, when she had weaned Loruhamah, she conceived and bare a son.

9 Then said God, Call his name [t]Loammi: for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God.

engaged both in an intimate acquaintance with heaven, and in a great deal of public business on this earth. And now he must think of bidding farewell to this present state; "Go thou thy way till the end be." 1. It is good for us all to think much of going away from this world; we are still going, and must be gone shortly, gone the way of all the earth. "'Go thou thy way,' thou hast finished thy testimony, done thy work, and accomplished as a hireling thy day: therefore now, 'Go thy way,' and leave it to others to take thy room." 2. When a good man "goes his way" from this world, he enters into rest; "'Thou shalt rest' from all thy present toils and tosses, and shalt not see the evils that are coming on the next generation." Never could a child of God say more pertinently than, in his dying moments, "Return unto thy rest, O my soul." 3. Time and days will have an end; not only our time and days will end very shortly, but all times and days will have an end at length; yet a little while, and time shall be no more; but all its revolutions will be numbered and finished. 4. Our rest in the grave will be but "till the end of the days:" and then the peaceful rest will be happily disturbed by a joyful resurrection. Job foresaw this when he said of the dead, "till the heavens be no more," they "shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep:" implying that then they shall, Job xiv. 12. 5. We must every one of us "stand in our lot at the end of the days." In the judgment of the great day, we must have our allotment according to what we were, and what we did, in the body; either, "Come ye blessed," or "Go, ye cursed;" and we must "stand for ever in that lot." It was a comfort to Daniel, it is a comfort to all the saints, that, whatever their lot is in the days of time, they shall have a happy lot "in the end of the days," shall have their "lot among the chosen." 6. A believing hope and prospect of a blessed lot in the heavenly Canaan, at the end of the days, will be an effectual support to us when we are going our way out of this world, and will furnish us with living comforts in dying moments.—Henry.

CHAP. I. The Author.—Ver. 1. This is the general title of the book: Hosea wrote The word that came to him from the Lord. His name is the same as Joshua, or Jesus, except as these are compounded with the first syllable of the word Jehovah. It signifies salvation.—All the kings of Judah, that succeeded each other during Hosea's ministry, are mentioned: but Jeroboam, of Israel alone, under whose reign he began to prophesy; for after Jeroboam's death the affairs of Israel fell into the utmost confusion. If we suppose, that the prophet exercised his ministry for a few of the last years of Jeroboam, and the first of Hezekiah, we shall find that he laboured in the work nearly seventy years. [He must have lived to a very great age. No information is given of the time of the accomplishment of his predictions.

His First Commission.—Ver. 2, 3. The prophet was called to enter on his prophetical office in a very remarkable manner. When he was, as it seems, a very young man, he was commanded by the Lord, to marry a wife of whoredoms, one notorious for that vice, and whose children would be considered as children of whoredoms. This was intended to be an emblem of the Lord's dealings with the idolatrous Israelites whom he had espoused to himself. And accordingly Hosea married Gomer the daughter of Diblaim. —It hath been much disputed whether this was done in reality or in vision; or whether it were any thing more than a parable that he spake to the people. But it seems to be taking an unauthorized liberty with Scripture, to explain narrative into vision, or parable, without absolute necessity, or any intimation of it in the text. If we consider it as a reality, many difficulties remain to be obviated. It is argued, that it would have been inconsistent with the prophet's character, to marry a notoriously bad woman: and therefore some have conjectured, that she was previously reformed. (as Rahab the harlot had been, before she was married to Salmon:) others imagine, that she bare a good character when the prophet married her, but afterwards became a wife of whoredoms, and her children were brought under the suspicion of being children of whoredoms; and this is more plausible than the former, which by no means accords to the thing signified. But perhaps it may be shown, that it was not unlawful or immoral for the prophet to marry a licentious woman on such an occasion. Some restrictions were laid upon the priests in these respects, but he was not concerned in them; Gomer was an Israelite, and not included in the prohibitions of intermarrying with Gentiles. The rule in the New Testament of believers marrying only in the Lord, was doubtless always obligatory, as to the spirit of it in ordinary cases; because most important consequences depend on it: but, (like the laws against the marriages of near relations,) though generally and highly expedient, it cannot be deemed of immutable and indispensable obligation, for cases may be imagined, in which it must be violated, or other moral laws of God be broken. The express command of God would suffice to authorize any deviations from ordinary rules, which were not of immutable and moral obligation; and it is impossible that he should actually command an immoral action; though he might command what otherwise might be wrong for a man to do, as the extirpation of the Canaanites, men, women, and children. So that it might not only be lawful for the prophet thus to marry, but his bounden duty, and to bear the heavy cross that it would lay on him.—Scott.

This an, and an encouraging m all their enemies and sorrows, they would sing praises with joyful hearts, as their fathers had done before, when they saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea-shore. From that time they would be more cordially attached to the Lord than ever; no longer calling him Baali, or my Lord and Master, alluding to the authority, rather than the affection, of a husband; but Ishi, which is the language of cordial affection, in a woman speaking to her husband. For, the abuse of the word Baalim in the worship of their idols should lead to a total disuse of it, so that it should no more be remembered or employed by them. Ver. 18—20. When the people were weaned from idols, and attached in love and faithfulness to the worship of the Lord; he would then not only renew his covenant with them, but he would make a covenant in their behalf with the beasts of the field, &c.: that is, he would take care that no creature should do them any harm, and that all should concur in doing them good. Their land was occupied by the beasts of the field during the captivity, when it had been desolated by war: but he would afterwards rid the country of these creatures, and defend it from invaders, and make it a quiet and secure habitation for them. Nay, he would betroth them to himself, as their husband, their kind friend, protector, and companion, in the most solemn and public manner.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We should own and love all those as brethren, whom the Lord appears to have put among his children; and encourage them with the consideration, that they have obtained mercy, and are become the people of God. But the ministers of Christ must not connive at the abuses or crimes of that religious community, which claims the authority, and stands in the relation to them, of a mother; for the glory of God, and the interests of his truth and righteousness, should be far nearer to our hearts, than the credit or favour of our fellow-creatures, however related to us or advanced above us.—Scott.

CHAP. III. CONTENTS.—Some think that this chapter refers to Judah, the two tribes, as the adulteress the prophet married, chap. i. 3. represented the "ten tribes;" for this was not to be divorced, as the ten tribes were, but to be left desolate for a long time, and then to return, as the two tribes did; but these are called the "children of Israel," which was the ten tribes, and therefore it is more probable that of them this parable, as well as that before, is to be understood. "Go," and repeat it, says God to the prophet; "Go yet again." Note, For the conviction and reduction of sinners, it is necessary that precept be upon precept, and line upon line. If they will not believe one sign, try another, Exod. iv. 8, 9.—Henry.

power exorbitant; when men's hearts are "fully set in them to do evil," Eccl. viii. 11, "what will be restrained from them?" Gen. ix. 6. When they break out thus, "blood touches blood," abundance of murders are committed in all parts of the country, and, as it were, in a constant series and succession. Cædes aliis aliis sunt contiguæ—Murders touch murders; a stream of blood runs down among them, even royal blood; it was about this time that there was so much blood shed in grasping at the crown; Shallum slew Zachariah, and Menahem slew Shallum, Pekah slew Pekahiah, and Hoshea slew Pekah; and the like bloody work, it is likely, there was among other contenders; so then the land was "polluted with blood," Ps. cvi. 38, "it was filled with blood from one end to the other," 2 Kings xxi. 16.—Henry.

INCREASING DEGENERACY.—Ver. 7—11. In proportion as the priests increased in numbers and prosperity, they grew notorious for wickedness; the Lord would therefore render the honour which had been conferred on them an occasion of their deeper disgrace, by exposing their crimes, and inflicting ignominious punishment upon them. They did not attempt to reform the people, but were well pleased to have the sin-offerings multiplied: for they feasted on the flesh, and had many perquisites from them: and they therefore delighted in the iniquity of the people as increasing their incomes.—Thus absolutions, indulgences, and dispensations, have long enriched the Romish clergy; and spiritual courts have prosecuted such offenders as could afford to pay fines and fees, apparently for no other reason; and many such things have been, and are perpetrated by the professed ministers of religion!—As these priests were the patterns of the people in their crimes, they would be involved with them in punishment without distinction. At length they would be reduced to pinching famine and unsatisfied hunger; their multiplying of wives and concubines, (contrary to the original law of marriage,) and their other scandalous lewdness, would prevent the increase of their families; and seeing they had left off to take heed to the Lord, manifold evils would come upon them. This shows that the priests of Aaron's family was chiefly intended; for the priests of the calves, and those of Baal, had not at any time taken heed to the Lord.—Indeed, the whoredom and intemperance, both of priests and people, deprived them of understanding and judgment, and rendered their hearts and consciences unfeeling, and utterly unfit for any thing good.—Scott.

SPIRITUAL INFATUATION.—Ver. 12. "My people asked counsel at their stocks," their their wooden gods; they apply themselves to them for advice and direction in what they should do, and for information concerning the event. They "say to a stock, Thou art my father," Jer. ii. 27; and if it were indeed a "father," it were worthy of "this honour;" but it was a great affront to God, who was indeed their father, and whose lively oracles they had among them, with which they had liberty to consult at any time, thus to "ask counsel at their stocks." And they expect that their "staff" should "declare to them" what course they should take, and what the event should be. It is probable that this refers to some wicked methods of divination used among the Gentiles, and which the Jews learned from them, by a "piece of wood," or by "a staff," like Nebuchadnezzar's divining by "his arrows," Ezek. xxi. 21.—Henry.

CHAP. V. PERSONS ADDRESSED.—Ver. 1. All orders and degrees of men are cited to appear and answer to such things as shall be laid to their charge. "Hear ye this, O priests," whether "in holy orders," as those in Judah, and perhaps many in Israel too, for in the ten tribes there were divers cities of priests and Levites, who, it is probable, staid in their own lot after the revolt of the ten tribes, and did so much of their office as might be done at a distance from the temple, or "pretending holy orders," as the priests of the calves, who some think, are included here. Hearken, "ye house of Israel," the common people, and "give ear, O house of the king;" let them all take notice, for they have all contributed to the national guilt, and they shall all share in the national judgments. Note, If neither the sanctity of the priesthood, nor the dignity of the royal family, will prevail to keep out sin, it cannot be expected that they should avail to keep out wrath. If the "priests" and the "house of the king," though they bear such noble characters, sin like others, their noble characters will not excuse them, but they must smart like others. Nor shall it be any plea for "the house of Israel," that they were misled by the priests and princes, but they shall receive their doom with them, and neither their meanness nor their multitude shall be their exemption.—Henry.

DIVINE JUDGMENTS.—Ver. 11, 12. The Israelites suffered exceedingly from the exactions and oppressions of their rulers, and of victorious invaders. This was permitted in order to punish them, for their willing and persevering obedience to the laws of Jeroboam and his successors, which required them to worship the golden calves at Dan and Bethel, and to conform to other established idolatries, in express contradiction to the law of God. He would therefore insensibly, yet assuredly, waste their strength and prosperity, as a moth eats holes in the garment: and as Judah had proved equally submissive to the will of their idolatrous kings, he would consume them, as rottenness and worms do the wood. Ver. 13, 14. When Israel and Judah, at different times, found themselves pressed by enemies and dangers, instead of humbling themselves before God, and seeking his help, they sought the protection of the Assyrians, and sent to king Jareb, (perhaps another name for Pul, or Tiglath-pilezer,) but instead of healing their wounds, or doing them any service, they helped to make them incurable. This obstinacy provoked hrnim, (or the kingdom of the rounding nations, by alliances, intermarriages, and communion in idolatry: yet he still pretended to worship JEHOVAH. Thus he became a cake not turned, half burnt and half dough, and none of it fit for use; a motley mixture of idolatry and the worship of God. But he was eager in iniquity, and lukewarm in religion, and partial in every attempt to reform. The strange gods and heathen alliances weakened him continually; and the neighbouring nations by hostile invasions devoured his strength; yet he perceived no danger, and never suspected the cause of his decay, namely that the hand of God was lifted up against him. In short, he had as evident tokens of approaching ruin, as grey hairs are of old age and of the decay of the constitution: and the prophets evidently saw these symptoms and pointed them out to him, but he took no notice. This arose from his pride, which openly testified against him; seeing neither judgments, warnings, nor mercies could induce him to return and seek the Lord.—Scott.

FEIGNED RELIGION.—They pretend "devotion," but it was not sincere, ver. 14. When the hand of God was gone forth against them, they made some sort of application to him. "When he slew them, then they sought him. Lord, in trouble have they visited thee;" but it was all in hypocrisy. When they were under personal troubles, and called upon God in secret, they were not sincere in that; "They have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds." These made a "great noise," and said a deal, and yet did not "cry to God," because their hearts were not "right with him," not subjected to his will, devoted to his honour, or employed in his service. To pray is to "lift up the soul" to God, this is the essence of prayer; if that be not, "words," though ever so well worded, "are but wind;" but if there be that, it is an acceptable prayer, though the "groanings cannot be uttered." Note, Those do not pray to God at all, that do not pray "in the spirit." Nay, God is so far from approving it, and accepting of it, that he calls it "howling;" some think it intimates the "noisiness" of their prayers, (they cried to God, as they used to cry to Baal when they thought he must be awaked,) or the brutish, violent passions which they vented in their prayers; they snarled at the stone and howled under the whip, but regarded not the hand; or it denotes that their hypocritical prayers were so far from pleasing God, that they were offensive to him; he was "angry at their prayers;" the "songs of the temple shall be howlings," Amos viii. 3. God will be so far from pitying them, that he will justly "laugh" at "their calamity," who have so often laughed at his authority.—Henry.

13 Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer.

15 All their wickedness is in Gilgal; for there [z]I hated them:[3] for the wickedness of their doings [a]I will drive them out of mine house, I will love them no more: all their princes are revolters.

16 Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit; yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even [‡]the beloved fruit of their womb.

17 [d]My God will cast them away, because they did not hearken unto him; [f]and they shall be wanderers among the nations.

shipping idols; "They have sown the wind." They have put themselves to a great deal of trouble and expense, to make and worship their idols, have made a business of it, as much as the husbandman does of sowing his corn, in expectation of reaping some mighty advantage from it, and that they should be as prosperous and victorious as the neighbouring nations were, that worshipped idols. But it is all a cheat; it is like "sowing the wind," which can yield no increase; they "labour in vain, labour for the wind," Eccl. v. 16. They take great pains to no purpose, and "weary themselves for very vanity," Hab. ii. 13. They that make an idol of this world, do so; they "set their eyes on that which is not," which, like the wind, makes a great noise, but has nothing substantial in it. 2. They brought ruin upon themselves by it; they shall "reap the whirlwind;" a great "whirlwind," (so the word signifies,) which shall hurry them away, and dash them to pieces. They not only have not their false gods "for them," but they set the true God "against them;" their favour will stand them in no more stead than "the wind," but his wrath will do them more mischief than a "whirlwind." As a man sows, so shall he reap. "If it may be supposed that a man should sow the wind, and cover it with earth, or keep it there for a while penned up, what could he expect but that it should be enforced by its being shut up, and the accession of what might increase in strength to break forth again in greater quantities with greater violence?" So Dr. Pocock. They promise themselves plenty, peace, and victory, by worshipping idols, but their expectations come to nothing; what they sow never comes up; it has "no stalk," no blade, or, if it have, "the bud shall yield no meal," it shall be as the thin ears in Pharaoh's dream, that were blasted with the "east wind," and there was nothing in them; or, "if it yield," if they do prosper for a while in their idolatrous courses, "the strangers shall swallow it up," it shall be so far from doing them any service, that it shall be but as a bait to invite strangers to "invade" them, and as a spoil to enrich those strangers, and enable them to do so much the more mischief. Note, The service of idols is an "unprofitable" service, and the works of darkness "unfruitful;" nay, in the end they will be pernicious; Rom. vi. 21, "the end of those things is death." They that "sow iniquity," reap "vanity;" nay, they that "sow to the flesh, reap corruption;" the hopes of sinners will be cheats, and their gains will be snares.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. NO PLEASURE IN SIN.—Ver. 1—3. "Thou shalt not rejoice for joy," &c. Perhaps the Israelites were joyfully celebrating some public success, or gathering in their vintage or harvest, when the prophet published this message to them. They had no right to rejoice, as Judah had, where were still considerable remains of true religion; or even as other nations, which had not forsaken God, in so aggravated a manner, or been guilty of such deep contempt or so base and ungrateful an apostacy, as they had. Their prosperity therefore would be more transient and ruinous, than that of other nations; for like an adulterous woman, they had violated their covenant with God, and preferred the most worthless idols to him. They loved even to receive the fruits of the earth, as from these their paramours; as festivals in honour of their idols, were more suited to their state of heart, than presenting the sacrifices of thanksgivings to God, and honouring him with their substance, chap. ii. 12. He therefore would visit them with famine; so that their corn-floor and wine-press would not suffice for their support, instead of supplying their luxurious revels; and the "new wine would 'lie' to her," by disappointing her expectations, that is, those of the nation, considered as a harlot. Nay, the people would not be allowed to inhabit the Lord's favoured and good land, where he deigned to dwell among his worshippers: some of them would migrate into Egypt, either in the time of famine, or when pressed by the Assyrians; the rest would be carried into Assyria, and there be constrained to live on food that was ceremonially unclean, or even refuse and vile, being pressed with extreme necessity.

NO PROFIT IN SIN.—Ver. 11—14. "Ephraim" signifies "fruitfulness;" and the vast number, to which this tribe had increased, was its peculiar glory. By this distinction, the Ephraimites seem to have been greatly elated, but it was about to fly away, speedily and irrecoverably, as a bird let loose. Their children would die as soon as they were born, or be still-born or abortions; by which the nation would be gradually enfeebled and diminished: and of the small number that should grow up to maturity, the Lord would so bereave them by various judgments, that there should scarcely be any left of them: for nothing but misery could ensue, when God had been provoked to depart from them in anger, and to deprive them of his gracious presence and protection. Indeed Ephraim had been as prosperous and replenished, and as pleasantly situated, as even the flourishing city of Tyre, which excited the admiration of all beholders: but from this time they would bring forth and educate children, merely to be butchered by their enemies. So that the prophet scarcely knew what to ask in their behalf; or could only intreat the Lord to give them "a miscarrying womb and dry breasts," as a less calamity than bringing forth children for the murderer, or to be trained up in idolatry. Nor would God any more love them, or specially favour them; seeing all their princes were revolters, rebels, and apostates. Indeed the calamities were begun; their root was dried up, and their fruit would wither. When the Israelites were sentenced to fall in the wilderness, their children were preserved to inherit the promised land: but as Ephraim was to be finally rejected, even the beloved fruit of the womb would be slain with their parents, as those of the Canaanites had been.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. ISRAEL'S YOUTH.—Ver. 1. In the infancy of the nation, when Israel was weak and enslaved in Egypt, the Lord manifested his special love of him, acknowledged him for his son, and called him out of Egypt by the hand of Moses and Aaron. As this was typical of the true Israel's conversion from the bondage of sin and Satan, to the liberty of God's children, through his peculiar love to them; so it also prefigured the bringing up of the only begotten Son of God out of Egypt, whither he had been driven by Herod's cruelty; that he might in the Lord's land perform the whole work of our redemption.—The prophecy is applied by St. Matthew, to our Lord's return out of Egypt: and the literal sense of the words does more properly belong to him, than to Israel; which is observable in many other prophecies, which can but improperly be applied to those of whom they were first spoken, and, taking them in their true and genuine sense, are only fulfilled in Christ. [Lowth.]

DIVINE MERCY.—Ver. 8—11. "Strict justice" demanded, that Israel should be rendered as Admah and Zeboim, which were destroyed with Sodom and Gomorrah, by fire from heaven, so that none escaped, and the place where they had stood was rendered ever after a monument of divine vengeance. But "mercy" objected to this righteous severity: for how could the Lord give up his Israel to such universal and dire destruction? Speaking after the manner of men, his bowels were moved, and his heart pained and even turned within him at the thought; so that his repentings, or disposition to relent and mitigate the sentence, were excited along with his holy indignation. He would not therefore execute the fierceness of his anger, in so undistinguishing a manner, nor return by one stroke after another utterly to destroy Ephraim. For being God and not man, of infinite perfection in wisdom and mercy, as well as in justice and holiness, he knew how to moderate and regulate his indignation, and to glorify all his attributes in his dealings with them. He had dwelt in the midst of them, as the Holy One of Israel; and it would not consist with his glory to destroy them as he had done Sodom, without leaving any remnant, or to make them perpetual desolations: he would not enter Samaria, or their other cities, in this tremendous manner; some of the people should survive the catas-

CHAP. XII. EFFECTUAL PRAYER—JACOB WRESTLING WITH THE ANGEL.—Ver. 3—6. Having mentioned Jacob, (including the whole nation descended from that patriarch,) the prophet showed how contrary their conduct in trusting to an arm of flesh, was to that of their believing progenitor. As a token, that he would afterwards struggle hard for the birthright and the blessing of God, he even in the womb took his brother by the heel, as if contending for the privilege of primogeniture; and afterwards, being strong in faith, he had power as a prince with God, when he prevailed with him for deliverance from the armed force of his enraged brother. He was at this time in no condition to resist, and he had no place to flee unto; and he sought no other succour than that of God. But he wrestled with him, and had power over him whom Moses called "a man," as he appeared in human form, but who was "the Angel" of God's presence, the eternal son of God, yea, GOD, with whom by his strength he prevailed; and he would not depart until he blessed him. His wrestling was only the sign of that spiritual conflict by which he obtained this honourable victory, even fervent prayer; for he wept, (for the sins that had first enraged his brother's anger, and for the sorrows with which he was then oppressed;) and made supplication to him, even to the "Angel," for deliverance from his brother.—This very person called "a man" by Moses, (who yet records that name of the place, was called "Peniel," or "the face of God;") and by Hosea, GOD and the ANGEL, yea, "the" LORD GOD "of hosts," found Jacob at Bethel, and there spake to him, and to his remotest posterity with him. And who could this be, to whom these several titles belonged, but he, who appearing then in the form of God, afterwards took on him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of a man?—The Lord spake twice to Jacob in Bethel, but the first time especially seems intended; when God appeared from above the ladder to him as he lay asleep beneath, having fled from the face of Esau; when he gave most gracious promises to him and his posterity; when Jacob called the place Bethel, or "the house of God," and made a solemn vow to him. Afterwards he appeared to him at Peniel; and at length again he sent him to Bethel, to pay his vow that he had made in the day of his distress. But his descendants, regardless of all vows, warnings, and obligations, set up even at Bethel their golden calf, and turned that house of God into a house of vanity by their vile idolatry.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. TRANSIENT GOODNESS.—Ver. 3. God tells them that they shall be disappointed, and "driven away in their wickedness." This is illustrated by four similitudes; they shall be, 1. As the "morning cloud," which promises showers of rain to the parched ground. 2. As the "early dew," which seems to be an earnest of such showers; but both "pass away," and the day proves as dry and hot as ever; so fleet and transitory their profession of piety was, chap. vi. 4, and so had they disappointed God's expectation from them; and therefore it is just that so their prosperity should be, and so their expectations from their idols should be disappointed, and so will all theirs be, that make an idol of this world. 3. They are "as the chaff," light and worthless; and they shall be driven "as the chaff is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor," Ps. i. 4, xxxv. 5; Job xxi. 18. Nay, 4. They are "as the smoke," noisome and offensive; (see Isa. lxv. 5;) and they shall be driven away "as the smoke out of the chimneys," that is soon dissipated and disappears, Ps. lxviii. 2. Note, No solid, lasting comfort is to be expected anywhere but in God.

VICTORY OVER DEATH.—Ver. 14. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave." Though Israel, according to the flesh, be abandoned to destruction, God has mercy in store for his spiritual Israel. It is promised, 1. That the "captives" shall be "delivered, shall be ransomed from the power of the grave." Their deliverance shall be "by ransom:" and we know who it was that paid their ransom, and what the ransom was, for it was the Son of man, that "gave his life a ransom for many," Matt. xx. 28. It is he that thus redeemed them. Those who, upon their repenting and believing, are, for the sake of Christ's righteousness, acquitted from the guilt of sin, and saved from death and hell, which are the "wages of sin," are those "ransomed of the Lord," that shall, in the great day, be brought out of the grave in triumph, and it shall be as impossible for the bands of death to hold them as it was to hold their Master. 2. That the conqueror shall be destroyed; "O death, I will be thy plague. Jesus Christ was the Plague and Destruction of death and the grave, when by death he destroyed him that had the power of death, and when in his own resurrection he triumphed over the grave: but the complete destruction of them will be in the resurrection of believers at the great day, when death shall for ever be swallowed up in victory, and it is the last enemy that shall be destroyed. But the word which we translate, I will, may as well be rendered, Ubi nunc—Where now art thy plagues? And so the apostle took it; "'O death, where is thy plague,' or sting, with which thou hast so long pestered the world? 'O grave, where is victory,' or thy destruction, wherewith thou hast destroyed mankind?" Christ has abolished death, has broken the power of it, and altered the property of it, and so enabled us to triumph over it.—Henry.

BOOK OF JOEL.

IT is uncertain at what time Joel prophesied. Some think he predicted those calamities which Amos lamented (Am. vii.); others, that he lived afterwards. He prophesied to Judah exclusively, whether before or after the captivity of Israel. He foretold or described a terrible judgment on the land by locusts and drought; which has also been considered as typical of the calamities that were about to be brought on the nation by the Chaldean armies and other invaders. The most remarkable prophecy in Joel is that which the apostle Peter quoted on the day of Pentecost, and which is more than once referred to in the New Testament (comp. ii. 28-32 with Acts ii. 16-21, Rom. x. 13-16). The style of this prophet is allowed, by the most competent judges, to be exceedingly beautiful; and few remains of ancient poetry (none, except those reserved in the Sacred Scriptures) contain such an assemblage of elegance, pathos, and sublimity as are found in his writings. Whatever obscurity appears to us is wholly in the subject; for the language is uncommonly perspicuous; and, consequently, the critics have proposed much fewer alterations than in the more concise, sententious, and obscure prophecies of Hosea; nor has our translation of it been exposed to similar objections.

petition for. 1. To be acquitted from guilt. When we return to the Lord, we must say to him, Lord, "take away all iniquity." They were now smarting for sin, under the load of affliction, but are taught to pray, not as Pharaoh, Take away this death, but take away this sin. Note, When we are in affliction, we should be more concerned for the forgiveness of our sins than for the removal of our trouble. "Take away iniquity, lift it off as a burden we are ready to sink under, or as the stumbling-block which we have often fallen over. Lord, take it away, that it may not appear against us, to our confusion and condemnation. Take it all away by a free and full remission, for we cannot pretend to strike any of it off by a satisfaction of our own." When God pardons sin, he pardons all that great debt; and when we pray against sin, we must pray against it all; and not except any. 2. To be accepted as righteous in God's sight; "'Receive us graciously.' Let us have thy favour and love, and have thou respect to us and to our performances. 'Receive our prayer graciously;' be well pleased with that good which by thy grace we are enabled to do." Take good, so the word is; Take it to bestow upon us, so the margin reads it; Give good. This follows upon the petition for the taking away of iniquity; for till iniquity is taken away, we have no reason to expect any good from God: but the taking away of iniquity makes way for the conferring of good removendo prohibens—by taking that out of the way which hindered. Give good. They do not say what good, but refer themselves to God; it is not good of the world's showing, Ps. iv. 6, but good of God's giving. "Give good, that good which we have forfeited, and which thou hast promised, and which the necessity of our case calls for." Note, God's gracious acceptance, and the blessed fruits and tokens of that acceptance, are to be earnestly desired and prayed for by us, in our returning to God.—Henry.

REVIVAL.—Ver. 4—8. These verses contain promises in answer to the preceding prayers, whenever Israel should be excited to present them. God would heal Israel's backsliding, or their manifold apostacies and idolatries; he would recall them from their wanderings, pardon their guilt, subdue their evil propensities, speak peace to their consciences, renew their souls, and establish them in holiness; and all this would flow from his free, unmerited mercy and favour. Thus he would show that his righteous anger was turned from them, and that he was perfectly reconciled. Then he would be to them as the refreshing, fructifying dew, which silently distils on the plants and flowers all over the earth. Israel would become a holy people, growing fast, like the lily, which is noted for its beautiful whiteness. Yet as this is only a fading flower, he would also send abroad his roots like a cedar in Lebanon: his branches would become spreading and beautiful as those of the olive-tree, and the savour of his graces would resemble the smell of the odoriferous plants of Lebanon. Thus he would be a most stately, fruitful, and delightful tree, uniting the greatest variety of excellences: multitudes from all parts of the earth would come to dwell under his shadow, and be converted to the Lord.—Scott.

CHAP. I. GOD'S ARMY OF DESTROYERS.—Ver. 4. We are not told, in the history of the Old Testament, when this happened, but we are sure that no word of God fell to the ground; and though a devastation of these insects is primarily intended here, yet it is expressed in such language as is very applicable to the destruction of the country by a foreign enemy invading it, because if the people were not humbled and reformed by that lesser judgment which devoured the land, God would send this greater upon them, which would devour the inhabitants; and by the description of that they are bid to take it for a warning. If this nation of worms does not reduce them, another nation shall come to ruin them. Observe, 1. What these animals are, that are sent against them, "locusts" and "caterpillars, palmer-worms" and "canker-worms.' We cannot now describe how these differed one from another; they were all little insects, any one of them despicable, and which a man might easily crush with his foot or with his finger; but when they came in vast swarms, or shoals, they were very formidable, and ate up all before them. Note, God is Lord of hosts, has all creatures at his command, and, when he pleases, can humble and mortify a proud and rebellious people by the weakest and most contemptible creatures. Man is said to be a worm; and by this it appears that he is "less than a worm;" for, when God pleases, worms are too hard for him, plunder his country, eat up that for which he laboured, destroy the forage, and cut off the subsistence of a potent nation. The weaker the instrument is that God employs, the more is his power magnified. 2. What force and fury they came with. They are here called "a nation," because they are embodied, and act by consent, and as it were with a common design; for though "the locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands," Prov. xxx. 27; and it is there mentioned as an instance of their wisdom. It is prudence for those that are weak severally, to unite and act conjointly. They are strong, for they are "without number." The "small dust of the balance" is light, and easily blown away, but a heap of dust is weighty; so a worm can do little, (yet one worm served to wither Jonah's gourd,) but numbers of them can do wonders. They are said to have the "teeth of a lion," of a "great lion," because of the great and terrible execution they do. Note, Locusts become as lions, when they come armed with a divine commission. We read of the locusts out of the bottomless pit, that "their teeth were as the teeth of lions," Rev. ix. 8. 3. What mischief they do. They eat up all before them; what one leaves the other devours; they destroy not only the grass and corn, BLOW ye the *trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm [c]in my holy mountain; [d]let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: [e]for the day of the LORD cometh, for it is nigh at hand.

2 A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, [g]as the morning spread upon the mountains; [h]a great people and a strong: [i]there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many [†]generations.

3 A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like [b]the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle array.

6 Before their face the people shall be much pained; all faces shall gather [‡]blackness.

7 They shall [y]run like mighty men; they shall [k]climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:

8 Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the [s]sword, they shall not be wounded.

9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall; they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.

10 The [y]earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: [z]the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:

11 And the LORD shall [a]utter his voice before his army;[1] for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for [d]the day of the LORD is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?

12 ¶ Therefore also now, saith the LORD, [f]Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning;

13 And [h]rend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the LORD your God: [k]for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, [m]and repenteth him of the evil.

14 Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him, even a meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the LORD your God?

15 ¶ Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly;

16 Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts; let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet:

17 Let the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep between the porch[2] and the altar, and let them say, [a]Spare thy people, O LORD, [b]and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should [l]rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

18 Then will the LORD [*]be jealous for his land, and pity his people.

19 Yea, the LORD will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith; [l]and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:

20 But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his hinder part toward the utmost sea: and his stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath [*]done great things.

21 ¶ Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: [o]for the LORD will do great things.

22 Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength.

23 Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and [*]rejoice in the LORD your God: for he hath given you [†]the former rain [‡]moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month.

24 And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil.

25 And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army which I sent among you.

26 And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, [s]and praise the name of the LORD your God, [h]that hath dealt wondrously with you; and my people shall never be ashamed.

27 And ye shall know that [k]I am in the midst of Israel, and [l]that I am the LORD your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed.

28 ¶ And it shall come to pass afterward, [n]that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy,[3] your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions:

3 This promise is rather of a comparative meaning; i.e., they shall have as clear and full knowledge of the deep mysteries of God's law as prophets beforetime had. The law and prophets were till John, and, during this time, the gifts of the Spirit were given in lesser measures, and of all men the prophets had greater measures of the Spirit; but, in these days, the least in the kingdom of God is greater than John. Old and young shall know Divine things as clearly as if God had extraordinarily revealed Himself to them by dreams.—Poole.

but the trees; ver. 7, the "vine is laid waste." These vermin eat the leaves which should be a shelter to the fruit while it ripens, and so that also perishes and comes to nothing. They eat the very bark of the fig-tree, and so kill it. Thus the "fig-tree does not blossom," nor is there "fruit in the vine."—Henry.

CHAP. II. THE LOCUSTS.—Ver. 2—10. They are a "great people, and a strong." Any one that sees the vast numbers that there shall be of locusts and caterpillars destroying the land, will say, (as we are all apt to be most affected with what is present,) "Surely, never was the like before, nor ever will be the like again." Note, Extraordinary judgments are rare things, and seldom happen, which is an instance of God's patience; when God had drowned the world once, he promised never to do it again. The army is here described to be, 1. Very bold and daring; they "are as horses," as war-horses, that rush into the battle, and "are not affrighted," Job xxxix. 22; and "as horsemen" carried on with martial fire and fury, "so they shall run." Some of the ancients have observed that the head of a locust is very like the head of a horse. 2. Very loud and noisy; "like the noise of chariots," of many chariots, when driven furiously over rough ground, "on the tops of the mountains." Hence is borrowed part of the description of the locusts which St. John saw rise out of the bottomless pit, Rev. ix. 7, 9, "The shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared to the battle; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots, of many horses running to the battle." Historians tell us that the noise made by swarms of locusts in those countries that are infested with them, has sometimes been heard six miles off. The noise is likewise compared to that of a "roaring fire;" it is like the "noise of a flame" that "devours the stubble;" which noise is the more terrible, because that which it is the indication of, is devouring. Note, When God's judgments are abroad, they make a great noise; and it is necessary for the awakening of a secure and stupid world. 3. They are very regular, and keep ranks, in their march; though numerous and greedy of spoil, yet they are "as a strong people set in battle array;" "they shall march every one on his ways," straight forward, as if they had been trained up by the discipline of war to keep their post, and observe their right hand man; "they shall not break their ranks, nor one thrust another." Their number and swiftness shall breed no confusion. See how God can make creatures to act by rule that have no reason to act by, when he designs to serve his own purposes by them. And see how necessary it is that those who are employed in any service for God, should observe order, and keep ranks, should diligently go on in their own work, and not stand in one another's way. 4. They are very swift; they "run like horsemen," run "like mighty men," they "run to and fro in the city," and "run upon the wall," When God "sends forth his command on earth," his word "runs very swiftly," Ps. cxlvii. 15. Angels have wings, and so have locusts, when God makes use of them.—Henry.

OUTPOURING OF THE SPIRIT.—Ver. 28—32. The apostle Peter quoted almost the whole of this passage, in addressing the Jews on the day of Pentecost, as a prediction of those events which then began to take place. It stands in the history, Acts ii. 16—21, nearly according to the Septuagint; yet with some immaterial variations. The apostle also cites it, as predicting the conversion of the Gentiles, Rom. x. 11—21. After the events, before more expressly foretold, or "in the latter days," the times of the Messiah, the LORD promised to "pour out his Spirit upon all flesh."—"Though the Jews only are enumerated, there is a latent reference to the effusion of the Spirit on the Gentiles also, in the times of gospel-dispensation." [Bp. Newcombe.] This promise began to be accomplished on the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the apostles, and on the assembled multitude, of whom great numbers were converted: and it was continued in the converting grace and supernatural gifts, conferred on the Jews and Gentiles through many nations. Then the sons and daughters of the Jews became prophets, and exercised many miraculous powers; both old and young men were favoured with prophetic dreams and visions; and even servants and handmaidens, though in a state of slavery, were made partakers of the sanctifying grace and the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit. But it is predicted, that about that time God would begin to show signs of his awful displeasure against the Jewish nation; and that extraordinary appearances in the heavens and upon the earth, would be presages of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish church and state; which would be attended with immense bloodshed, terrible conflagrations, and pillars of smoke, such as ascend from the flames of burning cities. Then would the sun, moon, and stars be darkened, or be turned into blood: this foretold either the tremendous appearances in the heavens which preceded these calamities; or the total unhinging of the Jewish constitution, the subversion of all rule and authority in church and state, and those horrid intestine convulsions and massacres, which made way for the final destruction of the city and temple; by the just judgment of God, who, on that great and terrible day of vengeance, poured his wrath on the devoted Jews by the hands of the Romans. But in the midst of all these calamities, there would be deliverance and salvation for all, who should "call upon the name of the LORD."—"This St. Paul explains of those, who give themselves up unto Christ, and profess themselves his disciples." [Lowth.]—"Neither is there any way, or means to escape the terribleness of this judgment, but by believing in the Lord Christ, and calling upon his name. For in

Note, 1. The judg- , and spoken of, as "nigh udge were then standing , and will come according as one day;" things are se "our" judgment is at when every man's eternal state will be determined, and the controversy that has been long depending between the kingdom of Christ and that of Satan, shall be finally decided, and an end put to the struggle. "The valley of the distribution of judgment," (so the Chaldee,) when "every man shall receive according to the things done in the body. The valley of threshing;" so the margin, carrying on the metaphor of the "harvest." The proud enemies of God's people will then be crushed and broken to pieces, and made as the "dust of the summer threshing-floors." 3. Innumerable multitudes will be gathered together, to receive their final doom in that day. As in the destruction of Gog we read of the valley of "Hamon-Gog," and the city of "Hamonah," Ezek. xxxix. 15, 16 both signifying the "multitude" of the vanquished enemies; it is the word here used "Hamonim, Hamonim," expressed by way of admiration. O what vast multitudes of sinners will divine justice be glorified in the ruin of at that day! "A multitude of living," (says one of the rabbins,) "and a multitude of dead," for Christ shall come to judge both "the quick and the dead."

ABUNDANCE OF SPIRITUAL BLESSING.—Ver. 18. 1. The "streams" of this plenty overflow the land, and enrich it; "The mountains shall drop new wine," and "the hills shall flow with milk;" such great abundance shall they have of suitable provision, both for "babes" and "strong men." It speaks the abundance of vineyards, and all fruitful; and the abundance of cattle in the pastures that fill them with milk. And to make the corn-land fruitful, the "rivers of Judah shall flow with water," so that the country shall be like the garden of Eden, well watered everywhere, and greatly "enriched," Ps. lxv. 9. But this seems to be meant spiritually; the graces and comforts of the new covenant are compared to "wine and milk," Isa. lv. 1, and the Spirit to "rivers of living water," John vii. 38. And these gifts abound much more under the New Testament than they did under the old; when believers receive "grace for grace from Christ's fulness," when they are enriched with "everlasting consolations," and "filled with joy and peace in believing," then "the mountains drop new wine," and "the hills flow with milk. Drink ye," drink abundantly, O beloved. When there is a plentiful effusion of the Spirit of grace, then the "rivers of Judah flow with water," and make glad, not only "the city of our God," Ps. xlvi. 4, but the whole land. 2. The "fountain" of this plenty is in the "house of God," whence the streams take their rise; as those "waters of the sanctuary," Ezek. xlvii. 1, from "under the threshold of the house," and the river of life "out of the throne of God and the Lamb," Rev. xxii. 1. The psalmist, speaking of Zion, says, "All my springs are in thee," Ps. lxxxvii. 7. Those that take temporal blessings to be meant in the former part of the verse, yet by this "fountain" out of "the house of the Lord" understand the grace of God, which, if we abound in temporal blessings, we have so much the more need of, that we may not abuse them. Christ himself is this Fountain, his merit and grace cleanse us, refresh us, and make us fruitful. This here is said to water "the valley of Shittim," which lay a great way off from the temple at Jerusalem, on the other side of Jordan, and was a dry and barren valley; which intimates that gospel-grace, flowing from Christ, shall reach far, even to the Gentile world, to the most remote regions of it, and shall make them to abound in the fruits of righteousness, which had long lain as the barren wilderness. This "grace" is a "fountain" overflowing, everflowing, from which we may be continually "drawing," and yet need not fear its being "drawn dry." This fountain comes "out of the house of the Lord;" for those that would partake of the promised graces and comforts, must diligently and constantly attend upon instituted ordinances: and "from the house of the Lord" above, from his temple in heaven, flows all that good which here we are daily tasting the streams of, but hope to be "shortly," hope to be "eternally," drinking at the fountain-head of.—Henry.

BOOK OF AMOS.

AMOS was contemporary with Hosea, but it is supposed, by the most competent judges, that he began to prophesy before him, and continued in his office a much shorter time. He has been confounded with Amoz, the father of Isaiah; but the names in the original are very different. He delivered prophecies against several of the neighbouring nations, and against Judah; but he exercised his ministry chiefly in Israel. Two of his prophecies are expressly quoted in the New Testament (compare chap. v. 26, 27 with Acts vii. 42, 43, and ix. 11, 12 with Acts xv. 15-17), in both of which his prophetical character is strongly attested.

CHAP. I.

God's judgments upon Syria, 3, the Philistines, 6, Tyrus, 9, Edom, 11, and Ammon, 13.

THE words of Amos,[1] who was among the herdmen of [c]Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the earthquake.

2 And he said, [h]The LORD will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and [i]the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

3 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of Damascus, *and for four, I will not [†]turn away the punishment thereof; because they have threshed Gilead[2] with threshing instruments of iron:

4 But [o]I will send a fire into the house of Hazael, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad.

5 I will [r]break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from [‡]the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from [§]the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the LORD.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For [t]three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they [‖]carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

7 But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof:

8 And [a]I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod,[3] and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon; and I will [b]turn mine hand against Ekron; [c]and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord GOD.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the *[¶]brotherly covenant:

10 But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and [†]did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he [l]kept his wrath for ever:

12 But I will send a fire upon Teman, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.

13 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, For three transgressions of the children of Ammon, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have [‡]ripped up the women with child of Gilead, that they might [p]enlarge their border:

14 But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah,[4] and it shall devour the palaces thereof, [r]with shouting in the day of battle, [s]with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:

15 And [t]their king shall go into captivity, he and his princes together, saith the LORD.

CHAP. II.

God's wrath against Moab, 1, Judah, 4, and Israel, 6. God complaineth of his people's unthankfulness, 9.

THUS saith the LORD, [a]For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because he burnt the bones of the king of Edom into lime:

2 But I will send a fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of [d]Kirioth;[1] and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet.

3 And I will cut off the judge from the midst thereof, and will slay all the princes thereof with him, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [g]For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; [l]because they have despised the law of the LORD, and have not kept his commandments, and their lies caused them to err, after the which their fathers have walked:

5 But I will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Thus saith the LORD, [n]For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; [o]because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes;

7 That pant after the dust[2] of the earth on the head of the poor, [q]and turn aside the way of the meek: and a man and his father

CHAP. I. THE AUTHOR.—Ver. 1. The person by whom this prophecy was sent, was Amos, "who was among the herdmen of Tekoa," and was one of them. Some think he was a "rich dealer" in cattle; the word is used concerning the king of Moab, 2 Kings iii. 4. "He was a sheep-master;" it is probable that he got money by that business, and yet he must quit it, to follow God as a prophet. Others think he was a "poor keeper" of cattle, for we find, chap. vii. 14, 15, that he was withal a "gatherer of wild figs," a poor employment, by which we may suppose he could but just get his bread, and that God took him, as he did David, from "following the flock," and Elisha, from "following the plough." Many were trained up for great employments, in the quiet, innocent, contemplative business of "shepherds." When God would send a prophet to reprove and warn his people, he employed a "shepherd," a herdsman, to do it, for they had made themselves "as the horse and mule that have no understanding;" nay, worse than the "ox that knows his owner." God sometimes "chooses the foolish things of the world, to confound the wise," 1 Cor. i. 27. Note, Those whom God has endued with abilities for his service, ought not to be "despised" or "laid aside" for the meanness either of their original, or of their beginnings. Though Amos himself is n t ashamed to own that he was a "herdsman," yet others ought not to upbraid him wi h it, or think the worse of him for it.—Henry.

INDICTMENT AGAINST THE NATION.—Ver. 3—5. The prophet first began with denouncing judgments against the several oppressors of his people. Damascus was the capital of Syria. Three and four, or seven, transgressions, do not mean an exact number of offences, but intimate that in many things the persons spoken of had provoked the wrath of God, and were ripe for vengeance: and one offence is mentioned as more aggravated than the others, which was the immediate cause of their calamities. This, in the case of the Syrians, was their oppression of the inhabitants of Gilead beyond Jordan, whom they treated with as great cruelty, as if they had threshed them with threshing instruments of iron: or perhaps they actually tortured, in this inhuman manner, such of them as fell into their hands. "This alludes to the threshing wain, described by Isaiah, chap. xli. 15. It moved on serrated wheels, and at once forced out the grain, and cut the straw." [Bp. Newcombe.]—"Hence the word is used for the weak being crushed by the mighty." [Lowth.]—Therefore, the wrath of God as a consuming fire would enter the house, or among the descendants, of Hazael king of Syria, and consume those palaces that Benhadad his predecessor had erected at Damascus, or those which his son Benhadad should inhabit. The Lord would also break down the bar of that city, open her gates to the besiegers, cut off the inhabitants of the open country, wrest the sceptre from the hands of the reigning family, and carry the people captive into Kir, in the land of Media.

OPPRESSORS CUT OFF.—Ver. 6—8. Gaza, Ashdod, Ashkelon, and Ekron were the principal cities of Philistia: probably Gath was at this time in the possession of the kings of Judah.—The Philistines had added to their other crimes a recent instance of cruel revenge against the people of God. On some occasion, they had taken captive a multitude of Jews or Israelites, and had sold the whole company as slaves to the Edomites, who would be sure to treat them with the utmost rigour. The Lord would therefore no longer delay to punish them according to their deserts; but would destroy their cities, dethrone their princes, and extirpate the remnant of the nation.—This was executed afterwards by the Assyrians, Jews, and Chaldeans. Ver. 9, 10. The Tyrians had forgotten the brotherly covenant that had subsisted between David and Solomon, kings of Judah, and Hiram king of Tyre; and other treaties of amity, which had been entered into for their reciprocal advantage: and they had been guilty of great cruelty to the nation, after the example of the Philistines. This provoked God to send those judgments upon them, which were afterwards inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar and Alexander the Great. Ver. 11, 12. Edom, or Esau, was Jacob's brother; yet the Edomites were more cruel to the descendants of Jacob, than any of the strangers by whom they were surrounded! After the example of their progenitor, they pursued the Israelites with the sword.—Scott.

CHAP. II. MANY SINS.—Ver. 6—8. After the prophet had given a general warning to the surrounding nations and to Judah; he more particularly, in the name of God, addressed the Israelites, to whom he was especially sent. They also had filled up or were about to fill up, the measure of their sins, and the Lord would not avert from them the merited punishment. Several atrocious crimes were charged on them, some of which were sanctioned by the authority and example of the rulers. The smallest bribe, even the value of a pair of shoes, would induce the magistrates to give up a poor man to the will of his merciless oppressor to be cast into prison, reduced to slavery, or put to death; though his cause and character were most evidently righteous; nay, perhaps for that very reason! The least property of a poor man, though scarcely more valuable than the dust of the earth that fell on his head, excited their covetousness, and they panted after it till they got it from him: or, as some render the clause, "They tread down the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth." Thus they perverted the cause of such as were too weak, timid, or gentle to resist their oppressions. At the same time they were equally regardless of the Divine law, and even of common decency, in their sensual indulgences: for both the father and his son would cohabit with the same woman, to the scandal of religion; when the Gentiles themselves would not allow a man to marry his CAUSE FOR ALARM.—Ver. 4—8. These animated interrogations were intended to convince the people that they had cause for alarm, and should earnestly seek to avert the threatened wrath of God. The lion in the forest, and the young lion in the den, are observed to roar over their prey, or are urged by hunger for want of it, when they have it in view, or are devouring it, and not at other times: in like manner the Lord would not have "roared out of Zion," had he not marked out the idolatrous Israelites as the objects of his righteous indignation, which was about to seize upon them with irresistible force.—Birds are not caught in a snare by chance; but it is laid for them, and generally not taken up, till some of them be ensnared: so the calamities which befell the people were in effect of the Lord's purpose of punishing them for their sins, and would not be removed till they had effected their reformation or their ruin.—The trumpet announcing the approach of the enemy would excite the people to run together, and concert measures for their security; and ought not Israel to take the alarm at the terrifying messages delivered to them in the name of God? They would not surely ascribe their troubles to any other cause; for, was there any evil or calamity in a city that was not from him, and the effect of his wrath?—Scott.

CHAP. IV. WANTON RULERS.—Ver. 1—3. The cattle of Bashan were remarkable for their size, fatness, and wantonness; and the wealthy, luxurious, and profligate rulers and nobles of Samaria seem to have been intended, though some interpret it of the haughty matrons. But the princes might be described as kine, rather than bulls, to reprove their effeminacy and cowardice when assaulted by their enemies; whilst they crushed and trampled upon their unresisting brethren, and sold them for slaves; saying to the masters who bought them, "Bring us wine that we may drink." Having made the iniquitous bargain, perhaps on low terms, they required from the purchaser, in this slave-trade, to be treated with wine. But the Lord had sworn by his own holiness, that they and their posterity should be dragged out of their habitations, as helpless fishes are drawn by the hook out of the water to be destroyed. The wall of Samaria would be broken down by the besiegers; then every one of these oppressors would endeavour to escape by that

A lamentation for Israel, 1. An exhortation to repentance, 4. God rejecteth their hypocritical service, 21.

HEAR ye this word which I take up against you, even a lamentation, O house of Israel.

2 The [c]virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: [f]she is forsaken upon her land; there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord GOD, [h]The city that went out by a thousand shall leave an hundred, and that which went forth by an hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 ¶ For thus saith the LORD unto the house of Israel, [i]Seek ye me, [k]and ye shall live:

5 But seek not Beth-el, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba:[1] for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Beth-el shall come to nought.

6 [p]Seek the LORD, and ye shall live; lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Beth-el.

7 Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and [u]leave off righteousness in the earth,

8 Seek him that [x]maketh the seven stars and Orion, [y]and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and [z]maketh the day dark with night: that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth; [b]The LORD is his name:

9 That strengtheneth the *spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the fortress.

10 They hate him that rebuketh in the gate,[2] and they *abhor him that speaketh uprightly.

11 Forasmuch therefore as your [f]treading is upon the poor, and ye take from him burdens of wheat: ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted [†]pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink wine of them.

12 For I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: [k]they afflict the just, they take a [‡]bribe, [m]and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right.

13 Therefore [o]the prudent shall keep silence[3] in that time; for it is an evil time.

14 [q]Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live; and so the LORD, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken.

15 [t]Hate the evil, and love the good, and [u]establish judgment in the gate: it may be that the Lord GOD of hosts will be gracious unto [y]the remnant of Joseph.

16 Therefore the LORD, the God of hosts, the Lord, saith thus, Wailing shall be in all streets: and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing.

17 And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for [c]I will pass through thee, saith the LORD.

18 Woe unto you that [d]desire the day of the LORD! to what end is it for you? [*]the day of the LORD is darkness, and not light.

19 As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him.[4]

20 Shall not the day of the LORD be darkness, and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it?

21 ¶ I hate, I despise your feast-days, and I will not [§]smell in your solemn assemblies.

22 Though ye offer me burnt-offerings, and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them; neither will I regard the [‖]peace-offerings of your fat beasts.

breach, which was nearest to his station: they would cast away the treasures which they had hoarded in their palaces; or they would throw them down there, that they might be the more unencumbered in fleeing from the enemy; and yet they would not be able to escape.—Scott.

DIVINE POWER.—Ver. 13. If he be such a God as he is here described to be, it is folly to contend with him, and our duty and interest to make our peace with him; it is good having him our friend, and bad having him our enemy. 1. He "formed the mountains," made the earth, the strongest, stateliest parts of it, and by the word of his power still upholds it and them. 2. He "creates the wind;" the power of the air is derived from him, and directed by him; he brings the wind out of his treasures, and orders from what point of the compass it shall blow; and he that made it rules it; even "the winds and the seas obey him." 3. He "declares unto man what is his thought;" he makes known his counsel by his servants the prophets to the children of men, the thought of his justice against impenitent sinners, and the thought of good he thinks toward those that repent. He can also "make known," for he perfectly "knows" the thought that is in man's heart; he "understands it afar off," and in the day of conviction will set the evil thoughts among the other sins of sinners "in order before them." 4. He often "makes the morning darkness," by thick clouds overspreading the sky immediately after the sun rose bright and glorious; so when we look for prosperity and joy, he can dash our expectations with some unlooked for calamity. 5. He treads upon the high places of the earth;" is not only higher than the highest, but has dominion over all, tramples upon proud men, and upon the idols that were worshipped in the highest places. 6. "Jehovah, the God of hosts, is his name," for he has his being of himself, and is the Fountain of all being, and all the hosts of heaven and earth are at his command. Let us humble ourselves before this God, prepare to meet him, and give all diligence to make him "our God," for happy the people whose God he is, who have all this power engaged for them.—Henry.

CHAP. V. EXHORTATION.—Ver. 4—6. Notwithstanding all these denunciations, the Israelites would have nothing to blame for their ruin, except their own "obstinacy" in rebellion. Still the Lord assured them, that if they would seek him, they should live and be preserved from their enemies; that is, if they sought his favour and protection, by repentance, faith, and prayer, and by returning to his worship and service. And any individuals, who thus sought him, would save their souls alive, and might perhaps be rescued from the general ruin of the nation. But they must not imagine, that going to worship the calves at Beth-el, or Gilgal, or Beer-sheba, (which probably was in the hands of the kings of Israel at that time,) would avail them any thing. All the worship and sacrifices presented in those places were an abomination: and they must protest against them, and seek the Lord according to his word. For Beth-el and Gilgal, and their inhabitants, idols, priests, and worshippers, would fall into the hands of the enemies; and none of them would be able to avert, or to quench the fire of God's indignation, which was about to devour the house of Joseph, or the kingdom of Israel, of which Ephraim and Manasseh formed a principal part. "Beth-el shall become 'Aven,'" or "vanity."—The house of God was become the house of idols, and would soon be utterly ruined. "The idol you worship will not be able to deliver you, but will itself be involved in the common calamity." [Lowth.]—Scott.

NO ESCAPE FROM GOD.—Ver. 19. 1. The prophet shows the folly of those who "impudently" wished for "any of God's judgments," and made a jest of any of the terrors of the Lord; "'To what end is it for you,' that the day of the Lord should come? You will find it both 'certain' and 'sad;' not a thing to be bantered, for it is neither a thing to be 'questioned' whether it will come or no, nor a thing to be 'turned off' with a slight when it does come. 'The day of the Lord is darkness, and not light,' ver. 18. 'Shall it not be so?' ver. 20. Do not your own consciences tell you that it will be so, that it will be 'very dark,' and 'no brightness in it?'" Note, The 'day of the Lord' will be a dark, dismal, gloomy day to all impenitent sinners; the 'day of judgment' will be so; and sometimes the day of their present trouble. And when God makes a day dark, all the world cannot make it light. 2. He shows the folly of those who "impatiently" wished for a "change of God's judgments," in hopes that the next will be better and more tolerable. They desire "the day of the Lord," in hopes to "mend themselves," (though their hearts and life be not amended,) or, however, to "know the worst." But the prophet tells them that they know not what they ask, ver. 19. It is "as if a man did flee from a lion," and a "bear met him," a beast of prey more cruel and ravenous than a lion. Or as if a man, to escape all dangers abroad, "went into the house for security," and "leaned his hand on the wall" to rest himself, and there a "serpent bit him." Note, Those who are not "reformed" by the judgments of God, will be "pursued" by them; and if they escape one, another stands ready to seize them; "fear and the pit and snare" surround them, Isa. xxiv. 17, 18. It is madness therefore "to defy the day of the Lord."—Henry.

IDOLATRY.—Ver. 25—27. The generation of Israel, to whom the prophet spake, only copied the crimes of their forefathers, even from the time of their leaving Egypt. For almost forty years, during their continuance in the wilderness, the prescribed sacrifices to the Lord were greatly neglected or interrupted; and yet with great toil and expense, they carried along with them shrines or models of the tabernacles, in which their idols had been worshipped, with images in them, as learned men suppose. Moloch is a name familiar to the student of Scripture, but nothing satisfactory can be known of "Chiun," or "the star of their god;" perhaps some of the planets or constellations were worshipped under this name, and the image of it might be decorated or distinguished by the figure of a star. Some remains of this idolatry, probably, existed in the time of Amos.—"Hazael carried away many Israelites captives to Damascus:—but the king of Assyria carried the ten tribes captives, as far as Media, at a much greater distance than Babylon.—The captivity of the ten tribes would be far worse, than that of the two remaining, and with less hopes of returning to their own country." [Lowth.]—Though the ten tribes might be especially addressed, it is plain, that all the descendants of those Israelites who came out of Egypt, were concerned in the expostulation and the prediction.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. LUXURY.—1. The people were extravagant in their furniture; nothing would serve them but "beds of ivory," to sleep upon, or to sit on at their meat, when "sackcloth and ashes" had better become them. 2. They were lazy, and humoured themselves in the love of ease; they did not only "lie down," but "stretched themselves" upon their couches, when they should have "stirred up themselves" to their businsss; they were "willingly slothful," and took a pride in doing nothing; they "abounded in superfluities," (so the margin reads it,) when many of their poor brethren wanted necessaries. 3. They were nice and curious in their diet, must have every thing of the best, and abundance of it: they eat "the lambs out of the flock," (lambs by wholesale,) and the "calves out of the midst of the stall," the fattest they could lay their hands on; and these perhaps not out of their own "flock" and their own "stall," but taken by oppression from the poor. 4. They were merry and jovial, and diverted themselves at their feasts with music and singing; they "chant to the sound of the viol," sing and play in concert, and they "invent" new-fashioned "instruments of music," striving herein, more than in any thing else, to excel their ancestors; they set their wits on work to contrive how to please their fancy. Some men never show their ingenuity but in their luxury; on that they bestow all their faculty of invention and contrivance. They invent "instruments of music, like David;" entertain themselves with that which formerly used to be the entertainment of kings only. Or, it intimates their profaneness in their mirth; they mimicked the temple-music, and made a jest of that, because, it may be, it was "old-fashioned," and they took a pride in bantering it, as the Babylonians did when they urged the captives to sing them the "songs of Zion;" such was Belshazzar's profaneness when he drank wine in temple-bowls, and such theirs that sing vain and loose songs in psalm-tunes, on purpose to ridicule a divine institution. 5. They drink to excess, and never think they can pour down enough; they "drink wine in bowls," not in glasses or cups; (as, Jer. xxxv. 5;) they hate to be stinted, and must have large draughts, and "therefore" make use of vessels, that they can steal a draught out of. 6. They affect the strongest perfumes; they "anoint themselves with the chief ointments," to please the smell, and to make them more in love with their own bodies, and to guard against those presages of putrefaction, which they carry about with them while they live. They had no concern at all for the interests of the church of God, and of the nation, that were sinking, and going to decay; "They are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph;" the church of God, including both the kingdoms of Judah and Israel, (which are called "Joseph," Ps. lxxx. 1,) was in distress, invaded, insulted, and broken in upon. It is all one to them whether the nations sink or swim, so that they can but lie at ease, and live in pleasure. Particular persons that belonged to Joseph, were in affliction, and they "took" no "cognizance" of their case, of the wrongs and hardships they sustained, and the troubles they were in, nor took any "care" to relieve them and right them; contrary to the temper of holy Job, who, when he was in prosperity, "wept with him" that "was in misery," and his "soul" was "grieved for the poor," Job xxx. 25.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. THE PLUMB-LINE.—Ver. 7—9. The Lord next appeared to Amos upon a wall, that had been formed by a plumb-line: this might represent the church of Israel, as originally formed according to those rules, which God, in infinite wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness, had prescribed by Moses. The plumb-line in his hand implied, that he was examining with exactness how far the people had deviated from their rule and original constitution, being about to judge and punish them according to their sins. This vision seems to have discouraged the prophet's intercession: he saw their idolatries and iniquities to be so many and heinous, and the judgments predicted against them to be so righteous, that he could say nothing to it. But the Lord, having called his strict attention to the vision, showed him, that he was about to proceed against Israel in exact justice; that the threatened punishment should not be remitted; that the strongholds, cities, and idolatrous temples should be desolated; and that this would begin in the destruction of the family of Jeroboam, by the sword of a conspirator.

THE SIN AND DOOM OF AMAZIAH.—Ver. 10, 11. Amaziah, the chief priest, or president over the idolatrous worship at Bethel, was greatly displeased with Amos for declaring these visions at that place; and especially for the last, which he had not prayed to be averted. Probably he feared lest it should set the people against the worship of the golden calves, undermine his credit and interests, and even alienate them from the established government. He therefore sent word to Jeroboam, (who seems to have been then at Samaria,) accusing the prophet of having conspired against him, and of exciting

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos, [z]O thou seer, [a]go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there:

13 But prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: for it is the king's [‡]chapel,[3] and it is the [§]king's court.

14 ¶ Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet,[4] neither was I a prophet's son; but I was [f]an herdman, and a gatherer of [l]sycamore-fruit:[5]

15 And the LORD took me [*]as I followed the flock, and the LORD said unto me, [h]Go, prophesy unto my people Israel.

16 Now therefore [i]hear thou the word of the LORD: Thou sayest, Prophesy not against Israel, [j]and drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line; and thou shalt die in a polluted land; [p]and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

the people to revolt and rebellion: so that the land was not able to bear all his words, and would certainly be greatly injured, unless he were silenced and punished. But he offered no proof of this conspiracy, except Amos's predictions of approaching judgments: and in reporting his words he bare false-witness against him; for he had not said, that "Jeroboam should die by the sword;" but that the Lord "would rise against his house with the sword," which took place after Jeroboam's death, in the murder of his son Zachariah by Shallum, who succeeded him. Ver. 15—17. Amos answered Amaziah with great boldness, yet with modesty and propriety. He declared that he had not formerly been a prophet, nor was his father a prophet; nor had he been educated in the schools of the prophets. But he had been a herdman, and a gatherer of a fruit, (a wild fig,) which grew on some kind of sycamore-trees, and was used for food by the poor people, or perhaps for the cattle. In these rural occupations he had been inured to hard labour and homely fare: and he had followed them contentedly, till the Lord, by express revelation, commanded him to go and prophesy to his people. Yet Amaziah, in direct opposition to the Divine mandate, forbade his prophesying against Israel, or dropping a word against that people at Bethel! The prophet was therefore commissioned to denounce sentence against him; that his wife, either through extreme indigence or licentiousness, should become a harlot in the streets of Bethel; that his children should be slain by the sword of war or of the murderer; that his estate should be divided by line among those who seized on it; that he should die in a heathen land; and that Israel would surely go away into captivity.—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. THE BASKET OF SUMMER FRUIT.—Ver. 1—3. Under the emblem of a basket of summer-fruit, which must be used immediately or it will perish, the speedy approach of the predicted judgments upon Israel was denoted, for which they were fully ripe. This may be supposed to have begun in the murder of Zachariah the son of Jeroboam: as the subsequent contests between the successive usurpers of the throne, made way for the Assyrian invasions, which terminated in the entire ruin of the kingdom of Israel. These approaching events would turn the songs, that were used in the temple of Bethel, &c., or those of their idol-temples, or in the palace, into howlings of terror and despair. Numbers would die in every place by the sword, pestilence, and famine, whose bodies the survivors would cast forth without the customary solemnities of burial; as hardened in grief, and regardless of their nearest friends and relatives, through anxious concern for their own safety.

OPPRESSION OF THE POOR.—Ver. 4—10. The rich and powerful were exceedingly addicted to injustice and oppression, as well as ringleaders in impiety and idolatry; and the approaching calamities would fall more heavily on them than on others. They ought, therefore, to consider how they might escape, or how they could endure such miseries; instead of oppressing the poor, as if they would devour and extirpate them by their exactions. It seems that commerce was suspended, even in Israel, on the new-moons and Sabbath-days, which they observed with some forms of devotion: but this was a weariness; and the covetous oppressors were ready to say to themselves, and to each other, "When will this tedious day be over? When will this task of religion be done?" They wanted to return to worldly pursuits; they were in haste to set forth corn to sale, in order to increase their riches. In managing this traffic, which so nearly concerned the labouring poor, they made the "ephah," or "bushel," too small, and thus cheated in the quantity of what they sold; and they weighed the silver, with which they were paid, by too heavy a weight, and thus cheated in the sum which they took for it; nay, they used artifice in the act of weighing, and imposed in that way also on their customers; and they even took advantage of the people's necessities, to sell the refuse-corn, which was scarcely fit for use. By these methods the poor became their debtors, and they obtained permission to sell them for slaves; which they inhumanly took advantage of when they gained but a very trivial sum by depriving them of liberty, chap. ii. 6. But the Lord sware by himself, who was the real excellency, or most honourable distinction, of his people, that he would never forget or omit to punish any of their works.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. DIVINE WRATH.—Ver. 1—4. The altar, on which the prophet in vision saw the Lord standing and giving orders for the destruction of the temple and the worshippers, is generally understood of the altar at Bethel: for the sacrifices offered there to the golden calf chiefly provoked God to take vengeance on Israel. He therefore from thence commissioned the Assyrians, to smite the lintel of the door, and cause its posts and pillars to shake; to destroy that temple and put an end to that idolatry; and mortally to wound the king, princes, priests and people, who worshipped there: for he was determined to slay the last of them by the sword of his vengeance, from which there should be no method of escape.—But as the vision seems to coincide with some predictions of the Lord's departure from the temple at Jerusalem; so it may be questioned, whether that event were not also intended by the Spirit of prophecy.—The devoted objects, however, of the Divine indignation would find no place of refuge from their omnipresent and omnipotent avenger. Could they even dig to the centre of the earth, or descend to the place of condemned spirits, his hand would there arrest them; could they climb up into heaven, his arm would cast them down; should they hide themselves in

BOOK OF OBADIAH.

IT is probable that Obadiah delivered this short prophecy about the time when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.—Obadiah signifies the servant of the Lord, which was a common name in Israel; but the prophet must be distinguished from all others that bare it.—He seems to have been contemporary with Jeremiah, and uses several of his expressions in prophesying against Edom (Jer. xlix. 7-22); and he concludes (as almost all the other prophets do) with predicting victory and prosperity to Israel and to the church.

The destruction of Edom, 1, for their pride, 3, and wrong unto Jacob, 10. The salvation and victory of Jacob, 17.

the rocks, at the summit of mount Carmel, he would search them out, and drag them from their recesses: or should they endeavour to elude his search by diving to the bottom of the ocean, he would order the serpent, or some destructive sea-monster, to bite or devour them there. The executioners of his vengeance would pursue them into every place whither they fled from them; and even the remnant, that would be dispersed as captives and slaves in the land of their enemies, would be followed by the murdering sword; as the Lord would watch over them for evil, and not for good.—The contrast between hell and heaven, shows that the unseen world, and not the grave, is here meant.

GLORIOUS PROMISE.—Ver. 11, 12. This passage is quoted by the apostle James, in the sense, though not in the exact words, of the Septuagint; which varies considerably from the present Hebrew text. The foregoing prophecy, evidently included the rejection of the Jews and their dispersion by the Romans, with which the establishment of Christ's kingdom was connected. The palace of David became a tabernacle, by the defection of the ten tribes and by subsequent calamities: but this tabernacle fell down at the Babylonish captivity, and it lay in ruins till the coming of Christ: so that these expressions may denote the mean estate of David's family, the degeneracy of Judah, and the low ebb of true religion. But by the incarnation and birth of Christ, the seed of David, and in consequence of his death, resurrection, ascension, and heavenly exaltation, that tabernacle was again erected, its breaches were closed, its ruins repaired, and it was advanced to far greater prosperity, than in the days of David and Solomon. The kingdom of the Son of David became conspicuous, glorious, and extensive; it acquired the ascendancy over its enemies, many of whom became the subjects of Christ; and this was the case among the heathen nations in general: they were called by the grace, and by the name, of Christ, who is the Lord, JEHOVAH, here spoken of, that predicted and performed all these things; for the Gentile converts, as well as other Christians, were called by the name of Christ, and called upon his name.—Scott.

CHAP. I. PROPHECY AGAINST EDOM.—Edom is the nation against which this prophecy is levelled, and which, some think, is put for all the enemies of Israel, that shall be brought down first or last. The rabbins by Edom understand Rome, Rome Christian they understand it of, and have an implacable enmity to it as such; but if we understand it of Rome anti-christian, we shall find the passages of it applicable enough. And though Edom was mortified in the times of the Maccabees, as it had been before by Jehoshaphat, yet its destruction seems to have been typical, as their father Esau's rejection, and to have had further reference to the destruction of the enemies of the gospel-church: for so shall all God's enemies perish; and we find, Isa. xxxiv. 5, the "sword of the Lord" coming down "upon Idumea," to signify the general day of God's recompences for the controversy of Zion, ver. 8. Some have well observed that it could not but be a great temptation to the people of Israel, when they saw themselves, who were the children of beloved Jacob, in trouble, and the Edomites, the seed of hated Esau, not only prospering, but triumphing over them in their troubles; and therefore God gives them a prospect of the destruction of Edom, which should be total and final, and of a happy issue of their own correction.—Henry.

FUTURE BLESSINGS.—Ver. 17—21. When this prophecy was delivered, mount Zion either lay desolate, or was about immediately to be desolated, while the enemies of the Jews had dominion over them.—"But upon mount Zion shall be those that escape," or (an escaping;) "and it shall be holy." [Bp. Newcombe]—Thus it was foretold that there would be deliverance and holiness at Jerusalem, and the house of Jacob would again occupy their ancient possessions. Then Israel and Judah would become as a flame, to consume the Edomites as stubble, till they were utterly destroyed; and the remnant of the people, that were at that time captives, would not only possess the land of Canaan, but the adjoining districts; which they would take out of the hands of those who now oppressed them.—The remaining tribes would possess the country which had belonged to those who continued in their dispersions, to the utmost borders of the promised land, and even beyond them. Thus Judah would possess mount Seir, to the south; and another company, the land of the Philistines towards the west; and others would recover possession of mount Ephraim and Samaria, though at that time possessed by strangers. Benjamin would inherit Gilead, beyond Jordan, which the Ammonites had seized on; and the residue of the ten tribes would gain possession of all the country formerly inhabited by the Canaanites, even to Zarephath, or Sarepta, which bordered on Zidon. It is not agreed what is meant by Sepharad; but some think that it was the name of a city in Edom, which the remnant of those who were led captive from Jerusalem would possess, with the cities of the south. For saviours, or deliverers, would be raised up on mount Zion, to judge and execute vengeance on the Edomites; and the kingdom, or dominion, would actually be possessed and exercised by JEHOVAH, for the benefit of his worshippers.—This prophecy was accomplished when the Jews returned to their own land by Cyrus's decree; when the temple was rebuilded, and the worship of God restored; when Jerusalem was re-established in prosperity, and the land replenished with inhabitants; when the Jews, under the Maccabees, and other leaders, entirely subjugated the Edomites, and incorporated the remnant of them amongst themselves as proselytes; and in their subsequent prosperity, till the days of Christ. # THE BOOK OF JONAH.

JONAH was, no doubt, more ancient than any of those prophets whose writings are preserved in this part of the sacred Scripture. He predicted the successes of Jeroboam, the son of Joash (2 Kings xiv. 25); and it is probable that the prophecy was delivered a considerable time before its accomplishment. Some think that Jonah executed his prophetical office as early as the latter part of Jehu's reign; and it is not agreed whether the events recorded in this book occurred at his entrance on that office or at a later period. Nothing more is known of him, except that he was of Gath-hepher, a town in the tribe of Zebulon (Josh. xix. 13, Gittah-hepher); and the traditions extant concerning him are unworthy of the least notice. The book before us is rather a narrative than a prophecy. Several of the events recorded in it are of a very extraordinary nature; which has induced some to explain it as an allegory, and emboldened others profanely to ridicule it. But it should be remembered that our Lord himself hath repeatedly attested the truth of the narrative, and shewn that the most wonderful event in it was intended as a type or emblem of his own death, burial, and resurrection on the third day (Matt. xii. 39–41; xvi. 4; Luke xi. 32).

CHAP. I.

Jonah, sent to Nineveh, fleeth to Tarshish, 1; he is overtaken by a tempest, 4, thrown into the sea, and swallowed by a fish, 11.

NOW the word of the LORD came unto [a]Jonah, the son of Amittai, saying,

2 Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; [d]for their wickedness is come up before me.

3 But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD, and went down to [e]Joppa; and he found a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD.[1]

4 ¶ But the LORD *sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was †like to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and [k]cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them: but Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship,[2] and he lay, and was fast asleep.

6 So the ship-master came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, O sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, [q]if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

tines by Christ or his apostles.—They seem before that time to have been extirpated from the land. But the salvation and holiness of the gospel, its success and spread, by the faithful preaching of the word and the conversion of the Gentiles, were also intended; especially the future restoration of the Jews, the destruction of antichristian opposers, and that prosperous state of the church, to which all the prophets evidently bear witness. Then, and not till then, in the full sense of the words, shall "the kingdom be the LORD'S."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord exalts or abases, and renders nations honourable, or contemptible, as he sees good. Self-confidence, reliance on external advantages, ambitious projects, and carnal security, uniformly tend to calamity and contempt; and thus the pride of men's hearts deceive them. No exaltation or power can secure those whom God is concerned in honour to bring down.—Renowned warriors are generally the most rapacious and insatiable of all thieves and robbers; the prosperity of others only excites their appetite for plunder; and so riches tend to the ruin of their possessors.—They who rely on plausible and mercenary helpers are deficient in understanding: for there is so much treachery in man, that such persons commonly give their confederates the most fatal wounds. They only are happy who trust in the Lord; for in the day of his displeasure, he destroys the wisdom of the prudent, and mars the courage of the mighty, that all his enemies may receive deserved punishment.—God will surely confound those who oppress their brethren of the same nature with themselves; and those especially who hate such as the Lord loves, and afflict them because they belong to him. They who rejoice in the calamities wh ch others inflict, will be numbered among oppressors; and all that would escape their doom, must take care not to sanction their cruelties by their presence or approbation. It is criminal to behold, with the least degree of satisfaction, or even without deep concern, the distresses of our neighbours, and still more so to insult over them under their calamities. If we cannot enter the doors of the oppressed and afflicted, to sympathize with them, and to soothe or relieve their sorrows, we had better keep at a distance, lest we should increase or appear to take pleasure in their misery.—Scott.

CHAP. I. JONAH AND NINEVEH.—Ver. 1, 2. God put honour upon Jonah, in giving him a commission to go and prophesy against Nineveh. Jonah signifies a dove; a proper name for all God's prophets, all his people, who ought to be "harmless as doves," and to "mourn as doves" for the sins and calamities of the land. His father's name was Amittai—My truth; for God's prophets should be "sons of truth." To him "the word of the Lord came," to him it was, (so the word signifies,) for God's word is a real thing; men's words are but wind, but God's words are substance. He had been before acquainted with the "word of the Lord," and knew his voice from that of a stranger; the orders now given him were, "Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city." Nineveh was at this time the metropolis of the Assyrian monarchy, an eminent city, Gen. x. 11, a great city, that great city, forty-eight miles in compass; some make it much more: great is the number of the inhabitants, as appears by the multitude of infants in it; chap. iv. 11, great in wealth, there was no end of its store; Nah. ii. 9, great in power and dominion, it was the city that for some time "ruled over the kings of the earth." But great cities, as well as great men, are under God's government and judgment. A great city, and yet a heathen city, without the knowledge and worship of the true God. How many great cities and great nations are there, that "sit in darkness," and "in the valley of the shadow of death!" This great city was a wicked city; "their wickedness is come up before me;" (their malice, so some read it;) "their wickedness was presumptuous," and they sinned with "a high hand." It is sad to think what a great deal of sin is committed in great cities, where there are many sinners, who are not only all sinners, but making "one another sin."—Henry.

THE STORM.—Ver. 4—6. During the time which was occupied in this rebellious project, Jonah seems to have received no more impulses of the prophetic Spirit; but to have been left to great insensibility of conscience. A storm of wind was therefore commissioned to arrest the ship, and it was in the utmost danger of being wrecked. It seems that the tempest was of an extraordinary nature. The affrighted mariners, therefore, having some sense of a superior power, but no right knowledge of the true God, and being of different countries, cried every one to the idol that he had been used to worship, for deliverance from death; at the same time they cast overboard their merchandise, or tackling, to lighten the ship and preserve it from sinking. Yet during all this confusion and hurry, Jonah lay asleep below deck, and heard nothing of the matter; having perhaps had little sleep for some time, through fatigue and uneasiness. This caused the ship-master to address him as a very stupid and indolent person, and to reprove him for sleeping when all their lives were in such imminent peril; and to require him to arise, and call upon the God he had been used to worship, if so be he might be induced to regard, compassionate, and deliver them.—Thus, he who, as the messenger of JEHOVAH, ought to have been reproving the Ninevites, received a just and severe reproof from an idolatrous mariner!

THE PROPHET'S DANGER AND PRESERVATION.—Ver. 11—16. The mariners, perceiving that the tempest continued to increase, and not knowing how to act, inquired of Jonah himself, as JEHOVAH'S prophet, What they ought to do in this emergency? And he,

CHAP. IV.

Jonah, repining at God's mercy, 1, is reproved by the type of a gourd, 4.

BUT it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

2 And [b]he prayed unto the LORD, and said, I pray thee, O LORD, was not this my saying when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that [d]thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil.

3 Therefore now, O LORD, [f]take, I beseech thee, my life from me: [g]for it is better for me to die than to live.

4 ¶ Then said the LORD, *Doest thou well to be angry?

5 So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth,[1] and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city.

6 And [t]the Lord GOD prepared [†]a gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver convinced of his sin and folly, submitting to the justice of God, and expecting death for his crime, and perhaps receiving some intimation of the Divine will, counselled to cast him into the sea; and thus the tempest would cease, for he knew that it was raised on his account. He would not, however, cast himself overboard, for that would have been an act of suicide. But the men, probably affected by the candid confession and the disinterested conduct of Jonah, and fearing to lay hands on the Lord's servant, used every effort to get into port; that, putting him on shore, they might preserve his life and their own also. When they found their endeavours to be in vain, (as "the sea grew more and more tempestuous;" Mary.) they prayed (not every one to his god, as before, but) to JEHOVAH, entreating him that they might not perish for taking away Jonah's life, nor be deemed guilty of murdering the innocent; as his sovereign appointment had laid them under the necessity of doing this for their own preservation. After this appeal, they cast Jonah overboard: and as the storm immediately ceased, they were so impressed with what they had seen and heard, that they exceedingly feared the power, and reverenced the authority of JEHOVAH, and worshipped his name; and either at that time, or as soon as they could, they offered to him sacrifices of thanksgiving for their deliverance, and made vows of becoming his servants and worshippers. Ver. 17. As it was the will of God to chastise Jonah, but not to cut him off, he had prepared a great fish near the ship, to receive him into his stomach. Christ hath called it a whale, and repeatedly authenticated the whole narration; and probably some of that species have throats wide enough to swallow a man, though others may not. The whole affair was miraculous: the preservation of Jonah from suffocation in the belly of the whale could only be effected by a continued exertion of almighty power; and the most daring infidel will scarcely venture to say that God could not prepare such a great fish for this purpose, and effect Jonah's deliverance in such a manner. In this situation Jonah remained for three days and three nights; at least, (according to the Hebrew phraseology,) one whole day and night and a part of two others. In this he was a type of Christ, as dead and buried, and rising again on the third day. "The precise time was thus determined, to prefigure the period of our Lord's continuance in the grave." [Bp. Newcombe.]—Scott.

CHAP. II. JONAH'S PRAYER.—We cannot be in any place where we are excluded from the mercy-seat of God; and sharp afflictions are often sent to excite those to earnest cries for mercy, who were negligent in prosperity, and under the rebukes of his word.—Even believers may be reduced by sin, fear, temptation, affliction, and a sense of divine wrath, to a situation that bears some resemblance to the depths of hell: but their discouragements will differ from despair, in that they will never totally cease to seek help from God; and faith and hope will still struggle against the gloomy suggestions of unbelief.—Scott.

CHAP. III. PREACHING OF JONAH.—Ver. 3. When he came to Nineveh, he found his diocese large, it was an "exceeding great city of three days' journey;" a city "great to God," so the Hebrew phrase is, meaning no more than as we render it, "exceeding great;" this honour that language does to the great God, that great things derive their denomination from him. The greatness of Nineveh consisted chiefly in the extent of it; it was much larger than Babylon; such a city, says Diodorus Siculus, as no man ever after built. It is here said to be of "three days' journey;" for the compass of the walls, as some relate, was 480 furlongs, which, allowing eight furlongs to a mile, makes sixty miles, which may well be reckoned "three days' journey" for a footman, twenty miles a day. Or, walking slowly and gravely as Jonah must when he went about preaching, it would take him up at least three days to go through all the principal streets and lanes of the city, to proclaim his message, that all might have notice of it. When he came thither, he lost no time.—Henry.

ITS RESULTS.—Ver. 5—9. There were no outward indications of the overthrow of Nineveh, and Jonah wrought no miracle in confirmation of his prediction: yet the Ninevites believed it to be the word of God, and that it would be verified; probably through a conviction excited in their minds of the greatness of their guilt, and from a recollection of the many wonderful judgments that Israel's God had inflicted on his enemies. They therefore dreaded the threatened vengeance, yet had some hope of escaping it; and without delay they used every means which they could devise, in order to appease the wrath of God. For when the preaching of Jonah was made known to the king, he was so alarmed, that he laid aside all his ensigns of royalty, put on sackcloth, and sat among ashes; and, with the concurrence of his nobles, and the approbation of his subjects, he ordered a fast to be proclaimed, and observed with the greatest strictness. Not only were the people required to abstain wholly from food; but the very cattle were to be kept from all provender and water, that their mournful lowings might add to the solemnity of the awful occasion. All the inhabitants likewise, from the least to the greatest, were commanded to wear sackcloth; nay, the very cattle that appeared in the streets were thus covered, instead of wearing their former gaudy trappings.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. THE PROPHET'S PEEVISHNESS.—Ver. 1—3. Jonah thinks he has reason to complain of that, when it is done, which he was before afraid of: so hard is it to get a root of bitterness plucked out of the mind, when once it is fastened there. And why him from his grief. So Jonah ‡was exceeding glad of the gourd.

7 But God prepared a worm, when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered.

8 And it came to pass, when the sun did arise, that God prepared a §vehement east wind;[2] and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

9 And God said to Jonah, ‖Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, ‖I *do well to be angry, even unto death.

THE BOOK OF MICAH.

MICAH was contemporary with Isaiah and Hosea; but it is probable that he began to prophesy later than they. The date of the third chapter is fixed in Jeremiah to the reign of Hezekiah; but nothing further is known with certainty concerning the time when his predictions were delivered. His authority as a prophet, and that of his book as a part of Scripture, are twice appealed to in the New Testament, in respect of the place where the Messiah should be born (Matt. ii. 5; John vii. 42). Our Lord uses nearly his words, concerning the persecutions to which his disciples would be exposed (comp. vii. 6 with Matt. x. 35, 36).

CHAP. I.

Micah sheweth the wrath of God against Jacob for idolatry, 1. He exhorteth to mourning, 10.

THE word of the LORD that came to ᵃMicah the Morasthite,[1] in the days of ᵇJotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.

2 ¶ Hear, *all ye people; hearken, O earth, and †all that therein is: ᶠand let the Lord GOD be witness against you, ᵍthe LORD from his holy temple.

3 For, behold, the LORD ʰcometh forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth.

4 And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down ‡a steep place.

5 For the transgression of Jacob is all this,[2] and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? ᵖ*is it* not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? ᵠ*are they* not Jerusalem?

6 Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard; and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof.

7 And all the graven images thereof shall be beaten to pieces, and all the hires thereof shall be burned with the fire, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate: for she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they shall return to the hire of an harlot.

8 Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked: I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the §owls.[3]

9 For ‖her wound is incurable; for it is come unto Judah: ᵈhe is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jerusalem.

10 ¶ ᵉDeclare ye it not at Gath, weep ye not at all: in the house of *Aphrah ᶠroll thyself in the dust.

11 Pass ye away, †thou ‡inhabitant of Saphir, having thy shame naked: the inhabitant of §Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of ‖Beth-ezel; he shall receive of you his standing.

12 For the inhabitant of ⁱMaroth *waited ᵏcarefully for good; ˡbut evil came down from the LORD unto the gate of Jerusalem.

13 O thou inhabitant of ᵐLachish, bind the chariot to the swift beast: °she is the beginning of the sin to the daughter of Zion; ᵖfor the transgressions of Israel were found in thee.

14 Therefore shalt thou give presents †to Moresheth-gath:[4] the houses of ‡Achzib shall be a lie to the kings of Israel.

15 Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of ᵗMareshah: he shall come unto ᵘAdullam §the glory of Israel.

16 Make thee bald, and poll thee for thy delicate children; enlarge thy baldness as the eagle; for they are gone into captivity from thee.

did Jonah expect that God would spare Nineveh? "Because I knew that thou wast a gracious God," indulgent and easily pleased, that "thou wast slow to anger and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil." All this is very true; and Jonah could not but know it by God's proclamation of his name, and the experiences of all ages; but it is strange and very unaccountable, that that which all the saints had made the matter of their joy and praise, Jonah should make the matter of reflection upon God; as if that were an imperfection of the divine nature, which is indeed the greatest glory of it—that God is "gracious and merciful." The servant that said, "I knew thee to be a hard man," said that which was false, and yet, had it been true, it was not the proper matter of a complaint; but Jonah, though he says what is true, yet, speaking it by way of reproach, speaks very absurdly.—Henry.

JONAH'S GOURD.—Ver. 5—8. Doubtless Jonah might have been hospitably entertained at Nineveh, and allowed to live according to his own rules, had he been disposed to be friendly: and he might have been usefully employed, in confirming the inhabitants in their good purposes, and in instructing them in the truths and worship of God. But though he had received an intimation, that the city would be spared, he seems not to have believed it: and he would neither venture himself in the city, nor have any fellowship with the inhabitants; as if he meant, notwithstanding their repentance, to shake off the dust of his feet, for a testimony against them. He therefore left the city, and made a booth or tent to dwell in, till he should see the event. It pleased God, however, very graciously and miraculously to prepare a large gourd, which with rapid growth and luxuriant foliage, was speedily ready to afford him a refreshing shadow from the heat of the sun, from which it seems his tent could not defend him. This tended to appease his grief and calm his spirits; nay, he was exceedingly glad on account of this personal accommodation; whilst the repentance and preservation of a great city made him very angry and peevish! To check this disproportionate joy, and to make way for his further humiliation and instruction, the Lord caused a worm to destroy the root of the gourd, so that the next day it withered: and a sultry east wind increasing the burning heat of the morning sun, Jonah was so oppressed, that he fainted, grew more impatient than ever, and wished again for death as the most desirable deliverance from his misery.—Scott.

CHAP. I. THE AUTHOR.—The prophet is Micah the Morasthite; his name "Micah" is a contraction of Micaiah, the name of a prophet some ages before, in Ahab's time, 1 Kings xxii. 8; his surname the "Morasthite," signifies that he was born or lived at Moresheth, which is mentioned here, ver. 14, or Mareshah, which is mentioned, ver. 15, and Josh. xv. 44. The place of his abode is mentioned, that any one might inquire in that place, at that time, and might find there was, or had been, such a one there, who was generally reputed to be a prophet. The date of his prophecy is in the reigns of three kings of Judah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. Ahaz was one of the worst of Judah's kings, and Hezekiah one of the best; such variety of times pass over God's ministers, times that "frown" and times that "smile," to each of which they must study to accommodate themselves, and to arm themselves against the temptations of both.—Henry.

COMING JUDGMENTS.—Ver. 10—16. The prophet seems here to have had in prospect both the ruin of Samaria and the desolations of Israel by Shalmaneser, and the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib, kings of Assyria. The successes of idolaters against JEHOVAH'S worshippers, ought not to be declared at Gath, lest the Philistines should rejoice. In their presence the Israelites ought not to weep at all. "The word 'Aphrah' signifies 'dust:' and the prophet, it is likely, puts it here for Ophrah, in the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 23, that the name may better suit their condition."—In the distressed cities or towns of Israel and Judah, the inhabitants would be called to roll themselves in the dust. "Saphir" signifies "fair" or "beautiful," (some think Samaria was intended;) but its inhabitants would be stripped of their comely ornaments, torn from their habitations, and led away as naked slaves. "Zaanan," Josh. xv. 37. "Zanan" signifies "a place of flocks: Beth-ezel," a "house that is near:" the inhabitants of the former would not go forth to assist the latter under their distresses; but the enemy would soon fix his station among them, and they would share the fate of their neighbours, and the invaders would obtain a large compensation for their encamping before the city.—"Maroth" signifies "bitterness," but some think that "Ramoth" was meant, which signifies "exaltations." The inhabitants carefully looked out for and expected better tidings or better times: but evil came from the Lord upon them, and even proceded to the gates of Jerusalem. Lachish was a city of Judah, but it bordered on Israel; and having learned their idolatries, it communicated them to the inhabitants of other cities, and even to those of Jerusalem; therefore the city would certainly be taken and plundered by the Assyrians; and the inhabitants would be glad to flee away in chariots drawn by horses, dromedaries, or the fleetest animals; and they would give presents to Moresheth-gath, some town belonging to the Philistines, to shelter them from the invaders.—"Achzib" signifies "a lie;" and thus that city would deceive the expectation of the kings of Israel. The Lord would also bring the Assyrians, or their colonies, to be the heirs of Mareshah, which signifies "an heir," or "an inheritance:" and they would also seize upon Adullam, and mar all the glory of Israel.—"The honourable men shall be forced to hide them-

He is the "Breaker" that broke in upon the powers of darkness, and broke through them; that rent the vail, and opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. The learned Bishop Pearson applies it to the resurrection of Christ, by which he obtained the power and became the Pattern of our resurrection. "The Breaker is gone up before us" out of the grave, and has carried away its gates, as Samson did Gaza's, bar and all, and by that breach we go out. The learned Dr. Pocock mentions it as the sense which some of the ancient Jews give of it, that the "breaker" is Elias, and their "King" the "Messiah," the Son of David; and he thinks we may apply it to Christ and his forerunner "John the Baptist." John was the "breaker," he broke the ice, prepared the way of the Lord by the baptism of repentance; in him the gospel began, from his time "the kingdom of heaven suffered violence;" and so the Christian church is introduced, with "Messiah the Prince" before it, on the head of it, going forth "conquering and to conquer."—Henry.

Chap. III. False Prophets.—Ver. 5—7. The false prophets likewise were highly criminal, and indeed the cause of the general wickedness of the nation. They flattered the people into a delusive expectation of peace in their evil ways: yet they were ready to bite and devour such as opposed them, and even to declare war against those who would not satisfy their avarice and rapacity, being "greedy dogs that could never have enough;" so that their peaceable and soft language was restricted to their prophesyings before those who paid well for them. Therefore the approaching distresses should confute their prognostications, and prevent them from pretending to any more visions. The sun of their prosperity, reputation, and hope, would suddenly be darkened, and leave them in misery, contempt and despair. God would shame and silence all such seers and diviners; and they should cover their lips as mourners or unclean persons; confessing that they could obtain no answer from God to their anxious inquiries concerning the end of their calamities.

Their Sin and Doom.—Ver. 8—12. It is probable that Micah was greatly opposed by the wicked princes and false prophets: but he knew, and confidently declared, that he spake by the authority of God and the inspiration of his Spirit; that he was abundantly endued with honesty, wisdom, and energy, to deliver his faithful message, whether they would hear it or not; and that he was especially commissioned to declare unto his people the number and heinousness of their sins. He therefore entreated the rulers of the people to attend, and not to persist in fighting against God. They had, indeed, abhorred all justice, and perverted equity; they had beautified the city with magnificent 10 Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; [f]there shalt thou be delivered; there the LORD shall [s]redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies.

11 ¶ Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and [t]let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But [k]they know not the thoughts of the LORD, neither understand they his counsel: [t]for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor.[3]

13 Arise [m]and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thine horn iron,[4] and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the LORD, and their substance unto [q]the Lord of the whole earth.

NOW gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us; they shall smite the [d]Judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek.

2 But thou, Beth-lehem [r]Ephratah, though thou be little among the [h]thousands of Judah, [i]yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me [k]that is to be ruler in Israel; [l]whose goings forth have been from of old, from *everlasting.

3 Therefore will he [n]give them up, until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth; then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.

4 ¶ And he shall stand and †feed in the strength of the LORD, [s]in the majesty of the name of the LORD his God; and they shall abide: for now [x]shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.

5 And [y]this man shall be the peace, [z]when the Assyrian shall come into our land: and when he shall tread in our palaces, then shall we raise against him seven shepherds,[1] and eight ‡principal men.

6 And they shall §waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod ‖in the entrances thereof: thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders.

7 And [s]the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people [b]as a dew from the LORD, as the showers upon the grass, that [t]tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.

8 ¶ And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people, as a lion[2] among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9 Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

10 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD, that I will cut off thy horses out of the midst of thee, and I will destroy thy chariots:

11 And I will cut off the cities[3] of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds:

12 And I will [p]cut off witchcrafts out of thine hand; and thou shalt have no more soothsayers:

13 Thy [q]graven images also will I cut off, and thy †standing images out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands.

14 And I will pluck up thy groves out of houses, and fortified it with walls, and perhaps repaired, or added buildings to the temple; but it was done with money that had been the wages of murder and oppression. The magistrates, priests, and prophets, were alike mercenary and avaricious: yet they presumed upon their external privileges, the temple of God, and their formal worship: so that when they were warned of approaching judgments, they inquired whether the LORD were not among them, and were confident no evil would befall them. To punish, therefore, their hypocrisy and iniquity, the city would certainly be desolated, and become heaps of rubbish; and the mountain where the temple stood would be rendered as waste and unfrequented as the forests and deserts. This prophecy was delivered in the reign of Hezekiah, and probably in the beginning of it.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. UNIVERSAL PEACE.—Ver. 3. A disposition to mutual peace and love should be the happy effect of the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah; "They shall beat their swords into plough-shares;" angry, passionate men, that have been fierce and furious, shall be wonderfully sweetened, and made mild and meek, Tit. iii. 2, 3. They who, before their conversion "did injuries," and would "bear none," after their conversion can "bear injuries," but will "do none." As far as the gospel prevails, it makes men "peaceable," for such is the wisdom "from above," it is "gentle and easy to be entreated." And if nations were but leavened by it, there would be universal peace. When Christ was born, there was universal peace in the Roman empire; those that were first brought into the gospel-church, were all of "one heart and of one soul," Acts iv. 32. And it was observed of the primitive Christians, how well "they loved one another;" in heaven this will have its full accomplishment. It is promised, 1. That none shall be "quarrelsome;" the art of war, instead of being "improved," (which some reckon the glory of a kingdom,) shall be forgotten and laid aside as useless; they "shall not learn war any more" as they had done, for they shall have no need to "*de*fend" themselves, nor any inclination to "*of*fend" their neighbours; "Nation shall no longer lift up sword against nation;" not that the gospel will make men cowards, but it will make men peaceable. 2. That all shall be "quiet," both from evil and from the "fear of evil," ver. 4. "They shall sit" safely, and none shall disturb them; they shall sit securely, and shall not disturb themselves, every man "under his vine, and under his fig-tree," enjoying the fruit of them, and needing no other shelter than the leaves of them. "None shall make them afraid;" not only there shall be nothing that is likely to frighten them, but they shall not be disposed to fear; under the dominion of Christ, as that of Solomon, there shall be "abundance of peace." Though his followers have trouble in the world, in him they "enjoy great tranquillity." If this seem unlikely, yet we may depend upon it, for "the mouth of the Lord has spoken it," and no word of his shall fall to the ground; what he has spoken by his word, he will do by his providence and grace. He that is the "Lord of hosts," will be the "God of peace;" and those may well be easy, whom "the Lord of hosts," of all hosts, undertakes the protection of. The churches shall be constant in their duty, and so shall make a good use of their tranquillity, and shall not provoke the Lord to deprive them of it, ver. 5. When "the churches have rest," they shall be edified, and confirmed, and comforted, and shall resolve to be as firm to their God as other nations are to theirs, though they be no gods. Where we find the foregoing promises, Isa. ii. 2, &c. it follows, ver. 5, "O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord," and here, "we will walk in the name of the Lord our God."—Henry.

CHAP. V. BETHLEHEM.—Ver. 2. The house of David would be reduced very low; yet the city of David would certainly be honoured by the nativity of the Messiah. Ephratah distinguishes Bethlehem in Judah from another place of the same name, in a different part of the land, Josh. xix. 15, 16; and therefore Matthew here quotes the passage according to the meaning, not verbally; "And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Judah." This city had been reduced to be small amongst the flourishing cities of that numerous tribe, and its many thousands under their princes: yet the birth of Christ would so dignify it, that it would by no means be the least honourable of them; for he would come forth thence to be ruler in Israel, upon the throne of David for evermore. Or the clause may be read interrogatively, "Art thou little among the thousands of Judah?" The words, "unto me," may either refer to the Lord; and then they mean, that the birth of Christ was intended for the glory of the Father: or to the church, as represented by the prophet; and then they signify, that the Son of God became incarnate for the salvation of his people.

BIRTH OF MESSIAH.—Ver. 3, 4. Nevertheless, (as the word therefore may be translated,) the Jews for their sins would be given up to be harassed by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syrians, and Romans, until the time when the Virgin, that was to travail with child, should bring forth this great Deliverer. Then the chosen remnant of the Jews would be restored to the privileges of true Israelites; or the chosen remnant of the Gentiles would be converted, and united as brethren with the believers of Israel to be one fold under one Shepherd: and he, uniting tenderness and power, would govern, guard, and provide for his church of harmless, defenceless, and persecuted disciples, "in the Majesty of the name of the LORD his God;" exercising the perfections, performing the works, and displaying the glories of God through his human nature.—Scott.

HEAR ye now what the LORD saith; Arise,[1] contend thou *before the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice.

2 Hear ye, O mountains, the LORD's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth: for the LORD hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel.

3 O my people, [s]what have I done unto thee? and [t]wherein have I wearied thee? [t]testify against me.

4 For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, [t]and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5 O my people, remember now what Balak king of Moab consulted, and what [p]Balaam the son of Beor answered him from [q]Shittim unto Gilgal;[2] that ye may [r]know the righteousness of the LORD.

6 ¶ [s]Wherewith shall I come before the LORD, and [t]bow myself before the high God? shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old?

7 Will the LORD be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of [s]rivers of oil? shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my [‡]body for the sin of my soul?

8 He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and wnat doth the LORD require of thee, but to do justly, and to [t]love mercy, and to [§]walk humbly with thy God?

9 The [s]LORD's voice crieth unto the city, and [t]the man of wisdom shall see thy name: hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it.

10 ¶ *Are there yet [t]the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the [†]scant measure that is abominable?

11 Shall I [‡]count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?

12 For the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof have spoken lies, and their tongue is deceitful in their mouth.

13 Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee, [r]in making thee desolate because of thy sins.

14 Thou shalt [s]eat, but not be satisfied; and thy casting down shall be in the midst of thee; and thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver; and that which thou deliverest will I give up to the sword.

15 Thou shalt sow, but thou shalt not reap; thou shalt tread the olives, but thou shalt not anoint thee with oil; and sweet wine, but shalt not drink wine.

16 ¶ For [§]the statutes of [x]Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab,[3] and ye walk in their counsels; [a]that I should make thee [‖]a desolation, and the inhabitants thereof an hissing: [b]therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people.

CHAP. VII.

The church, complaining of her small number, 1, and the general corruption, 3, putteth her confidence in God, 5.

WOE is me! for I am as *when they have gathered the summer-fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat; my soul desired the first-ripe fruit.[1]

2 The [†]good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men: they all lie in wait for blood; they [r]hunt every man his brother with a net.

3 ¶ That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh for a reward; and the great man, he uttereth [‡]his mischievous desire: so they wrap it up.

4 The best of them is as a brier; the most upright is sharper than a thorn-hedge:[2] [m]the day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh; now shall be their perplexity.

5 Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.

6 For [r]the son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man's enemies are the men of his own house.

7 Therefore I will look unto the LORD; I will [u]wait for the God of my salvation: [x]my God will hear me.

8 ¶ Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, [b]the LORD shall be a light unto me.

9 I will [c]bear the indignation of the LORD, because I have sinned against him, [d]until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: [c]he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

10 [§]Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, [b]Where is the LORD thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be [‖]trodden down as the mire of the streets.

PROTECTION.—Ver. 7. "Then shall we raise against him seven shepherds and eight principal men," a competent number of persons, proper to oppose the enemy, and make head against him, and protect the church of God in peace; men that shall have the care and tenderness of "shepherds," and the courage and authority of "principal men," or "princes of men." "Seven" and "eight" are a certain number for an uncertain. Note, When God has work to do, he will not want fitting instruments to do it with; and when he pleases, he can do it by "a few;" he needs not raise thousands, but seven or eight principal men may serve the turn, if God be with them. Magistrates and ministers are "shepherds" and "principal men."—Henry.

BLESSED RESULT OF THE CONVERSION OF THE JEWS.—Ver. 7—9. The remnant of Israel, that was converted to Christ in the primitive times, namely the apostles, evangelists, and first teachers and professors of the gospel, were scattered among many nations, as the drops of dew or the showers of rain on the earth, which cause the grass to grow in those places, where no human culture is employed, and without waiting for the help of man. Thus they went into the cities and villages of the Gentiles, not as sent for by them, or commissioned by human authority, or depending on the power or wisdom of man; but as immediately employed, qualified, and prospered by God: and by their doctrine, prayers, and examples, they were the instruments of rendering those barren deserts fruitful in a large increase of spiritual worshippers, and holy servants of God our Saviour.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. A DISTRESSED CONSCIENCE.—Ver. 6—8. The words contain the supposed inquiries of the alarmed but ignorant Jews or Israelites, who heard of the Lord's controversy with them. They were afraid of his vengeance, and perceived the necessity of coming and bowing down before him, as the most high God; but they did not understand how to seek acceptance with him. The burnt-offerings and sin offerings, prescribed by the law, might perhaps be deemed insufficient: but would he be pleased with more numerous and costly oblations? Would thousands of rams atone for their sins? Would immense quantities of oil, even "rivers, ten thousand rivers," suffice for an oblation, suited to his greatness, and worthy of his acceptance? Or would a human sacrifice best appease his wrath? (as the idolaters judged respecting their deities.) Should they give their children, their first-born to atone for their transgressions; the fruit of their bodies to expiate the guilt of their souls? these absurd, impossible, or abominable proposals, represent the effects of ignorant, unhumbled terror upon the sinner's conscience; which is the root of superstition, in all its frivolous, cruel, and impious devices, to appease God, to quiet conscience, and merit happiness, without repentance, faith in Christ, or the sanctification of the Spirit. But to such an earnest and ignorant inquirer, the prophet answered, that the Lord had "showed him what was good;" that is, in the holy Scriptures, (and not in this verse only, as some explain it:) and therefore if he would come before him with acceptance, it must be in the prescribed way. The holy law was good, as the standard of duty; the sacrifices and legal purifications were good, as shadows of Christ, and of his blood and sanctifying grace; as appointed means of the sinner's expressing his repentance and faith, and seeking forgiveness and acceptance; but "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," and the chief subject of revelation; and what was there in the Lord's requirements from his worshippers, that was unreasonable or hard? He only commanded them to do justly, rendering to God and man what was their due, and acting with honesty, integrity, and fidelity, without injuring, defrauding, deceiving, or oppressing any, or tempting them to sin: "to love mercy;" taking pleasure in exercising compassion, forgiveness, and kindness, after the example of the Lord's goodness and mercy to them; and "to walk humbly with their God;" in a teachable, dependent, submissive, patient, thankful spirit, as his creatures, as penitent sinners, and as conscious of great unworthiness, depravity, weakness, and folly; of innumerable wants, and of entire meanness and insignificance in his sight.—All this is implied in, and may fairly be inferred from this passage; and we can never suppose that the prophet meant in a single verse to abrogate the ceremonial law, to supersede the necessity of a believing dependence on the promised Redeemer and his predicted atonement, or to establish another method of justification, in contradiction to the whole Scriptures: yet this is evidently the drift of some men's reasonings from this noted text, which only show how little they understand what is meant by "walking humbly with our God."—Scott.

CHAP. VII. SCARCITY OF GOOD MEN.—Ver. 2. There was so few "good people" to be found, even among those that were called "God's people;" and this was their "reproach." "The good man is perished out of the earth," or "out of the land," the land of Canaan, it was a "good land," and "a land of uprightness," Isa. xxvi. 10, but there were few "good men" in it, "none upright" among them. The "good man" is a "godly man," and a "merciful man;" the word signifies both. Those are completely "good men" that are devout toward God, and compassionate and beneficent toward men; that "love mercy" and "walk with God." These "are perished;" those few honest men that some time ago enriched and adorned our country, are now dead and gone, and there are none risen up "in their stead," that tread in their steps; honesty is banished, and there is no such thing as a good man to be met with. Those that were of religious education are "degenerated," and become as bad as the worst; "the godly man ceases."

THE BOOK OF NAHUM.

IT is conjectured that Nahum delivered this prophecy probably about the time when Sennacherib invaded Judah. It relates almost entirely to the destruction of Nineveh and of the Assyrian empire, of which the cutting off of Sennacherib's army was an earnest and presage. "This remarkable prophecy, thus remarkably accomplished, affords a signal evidence of the inspiration of Nahum, and a striking lesson of humility to human pride."—GRAY'S KEY. The best judges are agreed, that, in respect of arrangement, style, and sublimity, it is one of the most finished poems extant in human language.

GOD OUR REFUGE.—Ver. 7. "Therefore I will look unto the Lord." When a child of God has ever so much occasion to cry, "Woe is me," (as the prophet here, ver. 1,) yet it may be a comfort to him that he has a God to "look to," a God to "come to," to fly to, in whom he may rejoice, and have satisfaction. All may "look bright" above him, when all looks "black" and "dark" about him. The prophet had been complaining that there was no comfort to be had, no confidence to be put in friends and relations on earth, and this drives him to his God; "Therefore I will look unto the Lord." The less reason we have to delight in any creature, the more reason we have to delight in God. If princes are not to be trusted, we may say, "Happy is the man that has" the God of Jacob for his help, and "happy am I," even in the midst of my present "woes," if he be my help. If men be "false," this is our comfort, that God is "faithful;" if relations be unkind, he is and will be gracious. Let us therefore look above and beyond them, and overlook our disappointment in them, and "look unto the Lord."

GOD'S UNPARALLELED MERCY.—Ver. 18—20. We may well say, "Who is a God like unto thee?" Our holy wonder of pardoning mercy will be a good evidence of our interest in it. To "take to ourselves the comfort" of that mercy, and all the grace and truth that go along with it. God's people here, as they "look back" with thankfulness upon God's pardoning their sins, so they look "forward" with assurance upon what he would yet further do for them. His mercy "endures for ever," and therefore as he has "showed mercy," so he will. 1. He will "renew his favours" to us, "he will turn again, he will have compassion," he will "again" have compassion upon us, as formerly he had; his compassions shall be "new every morning:" he seemed to be departing from us in anger, but he will turn again, and pity us. He will turn us to himself, and then will "turn to us, and have mercy upon us." 2. He will "renew us," to prepare and qualify us for his favour; "He will subdue our iniquities;" when he takes away the guilt of sin, that it may not damn us, he will break the power of sin, that it may not have dominion over us; that we may not fear sin, or be led captive by it. Sin is an enemy that fights against us, a tyrant that oppresses us; nothing less than almighty grace can "subdue" it, so great is its power in fallen man, and so long has it kept possession. But if God forgive the sin that has been committed by us, he will subdue the sin that dwells in us, and in that there is none like him in forgiving; and all those whose sins are pardoned, earnestly desire and hope to have their corruptions mortified, and "their iniquities subdued," and please themselves with the hopes of it.—Henry.

CHAP. I. THREATENED JUDGMENTS AGAINST NINEVEH.—Ver. 2—6. The Assyrians had desolated the kingdom of Israel; they often harassed that of Judah, and perhaps at this time menaced its ruin; and they triumphed as if their idols had overcome the God of Israel. The prophet therefore began this "burden of Nineveh," by declaring that God was jealous of his glory, and revenged himself with fury, or great severity, on those that despised or blasphemed him, or injured his worshippers; and that, "he reserved for his enemies;" the word wrath, is not in the original; nor could words express the punishment that he reserved in due time to inflict upon them. Indeed the Lord was "great in power" and always able to execute his purposes: but he would by no means acquit the wicked, or obstinate impenitent offenders. His dispensations were indeed very mysterious: and when he came to execute vengeance, his way was through whirlwinds, storms, and black clouds, as if they were the dust of his feet. He would show similar tokens of his power and indignation, as he had done of old, when the sea was divided, and Jordan dried up before him; when the mountains trembled, and their productions were withered at his presence; even the earth, yea, the whole world, would at last be burned up before him, and all its inhabitants destroyed. What man, or kingdom, therefore, could withstand him, when his fury should be poured out like fire, and the rocks should be cast down before him?—This was a most suitable introduction to predictions of vengeance on proud Nineveh, and her king and inhabitants. Ver. 9, 10. Sennacherib, (as well as Shalmaneser and his predecessors,) devised to destroy the worshippers of God, which was considered as designing evil against JEHOVAH himself; being the result of proud enmity to him and defiance of him. He would therefore utterly destroy Nineveh and the Assyrian empire; and the calamity should be so complete, that it would not be necessary to repeat it. Whilst they formed powerful confederacies, and raised numerous armies, to execute their mischievous counsels, "being folden together as thorns;" and while they were perplexed in their counsels, and indecisive in their measures, like a drunken man; or while indulging in excess and intoxication, they would be suddenly and totally consumed, as the dry stubble is by the fire.—It is recorded that Nineveh was taken by the Babylonians and Medes, when the city was full of riot and intemperance, by reason of a feast, which the king and his nobles celebrated. Ver. 11—13. This wicked counsellor, who devised evil against the Lord, seems to mark out Sennacherib, who came from Nineveh to utter blasphemies by the mouth of Rabshakeh, and who devised to destroy Jerusalem: for this completed the provocation, that brought the vengeance of God on Nineveh and on the Assyrian empire. The Lord therefore declared, that though the army of Sennacherib was quiet, fearing nothing from the dismayed Jews, and though they were very numerous; yet the destroying angel, when he passed through them, would cut them down, as the scythe of the mower does the tender grass. Lord had given orders that Sennacherib's army should be cut off: but he himself was reserved for execution by the hands of his own sons. Esarhaddon his son, indeed, succeeded him, and reigned prosperously many years; but the Assyrian empire was subverted soon after, and probably that family was extinct, at least their power was annihilated; and no more of that seed was permitted to be sown or to grow upon the earth.—Scott.

CHAP. II. WAR AGAINST NINEVEH.—Ver. 1—10. 1. The "shields of his mighty men are made red," and, probably, their other arms and array; as if they were already tinctured with the blood they had shed, or intended hereby to signify they would put all to the sword; they hung out a red flag, in token that they would give no quarter. 2. "The valiant men are in scarlet;" not only "red" clothes, to intimate what bloody work they designed to make, but "rich" clothes, to intimate the wealth of the army, and that is the sinews of war. 3. "The chariots" shall be "with flaming torches in the day of his preparation:" when they are making their approaches, they shall fly as swift as lightning, the wheels shall strike fire upon the stones, and those that drive them shall drive furiously with a flaming indignation, as Jehu drove. Or, they carried "flaming torches" with them in the open chariots, when they make their approach in the night, as Gideon's soldiers carried lamps in their pitchers, to be both a guide to themselves, and a terror to their enemies, and with them to set all on fire, wherever they went. 4. "The fir-trees shall be terribly shaken;" the great men of Nineveh, that overtop their neighbours, as the stately firs do the shrubs; or, the very standing trees shall be made to shake by the violent concussions of the earth, which that great army shall cause. 5. The chariots of war shall be very terrible. "They shall rage in the streets," that is, those that drive them shall rage, you would think the chariots themselves raged; they shall be so numerous, and drive with so much fury, that even "in the broad ways," where, one would think, there should be room enough, they shall "justle one another;" and these iron chariots shall be made so bright, that in the beams of the sun "they shall seem like torches" in the night: they shall "run like the lightnings," so swiftly, so furiously. Nebuchadnezzar's commanders are here called his "worthies," his "gallants," (so the margin reads it,) his "heroes;" those "he shall recount," and order them immediately and without fail to render themselves at their respective posts, for he is entering upon action, is resolved to take the field immediately, and to open the campaign with the siege of Nineveh. "His worthies shall remember," (so some read it,) they shall be mindful of the duty of their place, and the charge they have received, and shall thereby be made so intent upon their business that they "shall stumble in their walks," shall make more haste than good speed; they "stumble," but shall not "fall;" for "they shall make haste to the wall thereof," shall open the trenches; and the "defence," or the covered way, shall be prepared, (something to shelter them from the darts of the besieged,) and they shall so closely carry on the siege, and with so much vigour, that at length the "gates of the rivers shall be opened;" those gates of Nineveh, which opened upon the river Tigris, (on which Nineveh was built,) shall be first forced by, or betrayed to, the enemy: and by those gates they shall enter. And then the "palace shall be dissolved," either the king's house, or the house of Nisroch his god; the same word signifies both a "palace" and a "temple."—Henry.

CHAP. III. SIEGE OF NINEVEH.—Ver. 8—19. The prophet shows them that all those things which they reposed a confidence in, should fail them. 1. Did the men of Nineveh trust to their own magnanimity and bravery? Their hearts should sink and fail them, "They shall be hid," shall abscond for "shame," being in disgrace, abscond for "fear," being in distress and danger, and not able to face the enemies; "because of" whose "strength" and "terror," having no strength of their own, they shall "seek strength," shall come sneaking to their neighbours, to beg their assistance in a time of need. Thus God can "cut off the spirit" of princes, and "take away their heart." 2. Did they depend upon their barrier, the garrisons and "strong holds" they had, which were regularly fortified, and bravely manned? those shall prove but paper walls, and "like the first-ripe figs," which, if you gave the tree but a little shake, will "fall into the mouth of the eater" that gapes for them; so easily will their strong holds be made to surrender to the advancing enemy, upon the first summons. Note, Strong holds, even the strongest, are no fence against the judgments of God, when they come with commission. The rich man's wealth is his "strong city," and a "high wall," but only "in his own conceit," Prov. xviii. 10. They are supposed to make their "strong holds" as strong as possible, and are challenged to do their utmost to make them tenable, and serviceable to them against the invader. "Draw the water for the siege," lay in great quantities of water, that that which is so necessary to the support of human life, may not be wanting; it is put here for all manner of provision, with which Nineveh is ironically bid to furnish herself, in expectation of a siege. 3. Did they put confidence in the multitude of their inhabitants? Were their number and valour reckoned their strongest walls and fortifications? Alas, these shall stand them in no stead, they shall but sink the sooner under the weight of their own numbers. "Thy people in the midst of thee are women;" they have no conduct, no courage, they shall be fickle, feeble, faint-hearted, as women commonly are in such times of danger and distress; they shall be at "their wits' end," add-

THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

"Habakkuk stands high in the class of the Hebrew poets. The beautiful connexion between the parts of this prophecy, its diction, imagery, spirit, and sublimity, cannot be too much admired."—Newcome. He is repeatedly quoted as an inspired writer in the New Testament (comp. i. 5 with Acts xiii. 40, 41; and ii. 3, 4 with Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11; Heb. x. 37, 38), and his predictions of the devastations made by the Chaldeans, and the judgments to be inflicted on them, are generally considered as including the temporary success and final ruin of the oppressors and corrupters of the Christian church, and the final and universal prevalence of true religion throughout the earth.

CHAP. I.

Habakkuk is shewn the fearful vengeance of the Chaldeans.

THE [a]burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

2 O Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, [c]and thou wilt not save!

3 Why dost thou shew me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? for spoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raise up strife and contention.

4 Therefore [d]the law is slacked, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore *wrong judgment proceedeth.

5 ¶ Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously; [f]for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you.

6 For, lo, I raise up the Chaldeans,[1] that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the †breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling-places that are not theirs.

7 They are terrible and dreadful: ‡their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

8 Their horses also are swifter than the leopards,[2] and are more [g]fierce than the evening wolves: and their horsemen shall spread themselves, and their horsemen shall come from far; [e]they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat.

ing to their griefs and fears by the power of their own imagination, and utterly unable to do any thing for themselves; the valiant men shall become cowards. O vere Phrygiæ, neque enim Phryges—Phrygian dames, not Phrygian men. Though they "make themselves many," as the "canker-worm and as the locust," that come in vast swarms, "though thou hast multiplied thy merchants above the stars of heaven," though thy exchange be thronged with wealthy traders, who having so much money to stand up in defence of, and so much to lay out in the means of their defence, should, one would think, give the enemy a warm reception; yet "their" hearts shall fail them too; though they be numerous as "caterpillars," yet the "fire" and "sword" shall eat them up easily and irresistibly as the "canker-worm." They are as "numerous" as those wasting insects, but their enemies shall be "mischievous" like them. He adds, "The canker-worm spoils, or spreads herself," and "flies away." Both the merchants and the enemies were compared to "canker-worms." The enemies shall spoil Nineveh, and carry away the spoil, without opposition, or any hope of recovering it. Note, It is rare to find even those that have shared with us in our joys, willing to share with us in our griefs too. The "canker-worms" will continue upon the field while there is any thing to be had, but they are gone when all is gone. Those that men have "got by," they do not care to "lose by." Nineveh's merchants bid her farewell in her distress.—Henry.

CHAP. I. The Prophet's Complaint.—Ver. 2—4. "It is but a vexation to me, O Lord, to see that iniquity which I cannot reform. I see everywhere cruelty and oppression; and when I reprove them, there are those which raise up strife and contention against me." [Bp. Hall.] It appears, that the prophet had long lamented the abounding and increasing wickedness of his people, and prayed that God would put some effectual stop to it: but it continued to prevail, and he was tempted to conclude that his prayers were disregarded. He also complained that the Lord constrained him to behold violence and iniquity; whilst the poor were crushed and cruelly plundered by the powerful. He inquired why his lot was cast in such evil times, that he was forced to dwell among robbers and oppressors, and to witness discords and virulent contentions? These things were become so common, and the rulers were so addicted to bribery, that the law lay dormant, and the execution of it was entirely relaxed; so that wicked men circumvented and defrauded the righteous with impunity: for either no sentence could be obtained, or it proved an iniquitous decision. Such was the wretched condition of Judah; and it was the consequence of idolatry, impiety, or hypocrisy in religion.

His Appeal to God.—Ver. 12—17. The prophet again poured out his complaints before God, in the prospect of the dreadful calamities which were coming on his people from the Chaldeans. As an Israelite, and as representing that nation, he addressed God, the everlasting Jehovah, his God, his eternal and unchangeable Portion, and the glorious Object of his adoration; "his Holy One," who was perfect in justice, truth, goodness, and purity: he was therefore assured that he and his people should not die, or be utterly cut off by their enemies. The Lord had indeed ordained and established the Chaldean in power, to judge his people, to distinguish betwixt hypocrites and believers, to punish the one, to correct the other for their good, and thus to reform the nation. But he was of purer eyes than to behold iniquity without abhorrence; and therefore he would by no means countenance injustice, treachery, or tyranny. Why then would he look on, and keep silence as an unconcerned spectator, whilst these wicked idolaters devoured those that were more righteous than themselves? Why did he so prosper the cruel and rapacious, as to enable them to prey upon their inferiors, as the sea-monsters and large fishes do upon the multitude of the smaller fishes; or as reptiles are destroyed by more powerful creatures, having none to rule over them or protect them?—Indeed men become the prey of their own species, as fishes are taken by the fishermen, without being able to make any effectual resistance; whilst some were drawn out by the angle, others by the cast-net or the draw-net. Thus the victorious Chaldeans would prey upon the helpless Jews, and rejoice in their miseries and their own successful wickedness; and ascribe their victories to means and instruments, to their sword, courage, and conduct, by which they lived in plenty and luxury; and not to the living God, who alone giveth men power to grow rich and great. And this would increase their propensity to vain glory or vain idolatry; in which they would act as absurdly as if the fisherman should offer sacrifice or burn incense to his net, when he had taken a large draught of fishes, or grew rich by his occupation. But would the Lord permit them thus to gather and hoard up wealth by fraud and rapine, and to destroy whole nations, (especially his own nation,) to aggrandize themselves?—Scott.

CHAP. II. The Vision.—Ver. 1—4. Here, 1. The prophet humbly "gives his attendance" upon God; "'I will stand upon my watch,' as a sentinel on the walls of a besieged city, or in the borders of an invaded country, that is very solicitous to gain intelligence. I will look up, will look round, will look within, and 'watch to see what he will say unto me,' will listen attentively to the words of his mouth, and carefully observe the steps of his providence, that I may not lose the least hint of instruction or direction. 'I will watch to see what he will say in me,'" (so it may be read,) "what the spirit of prophecy in me will dictate to me, by way of answer to my complaints." Even in an ordi-

Habakkuk is informed that he must wait by faith, 2. The judgment upon the Chaldeans, 5.

I WILL stand upon my watch, and set me upon the *tower, and will watch to see what he will say †unto me, and what I shall answer ‡when I am reproved.

2 And the LORD answered me, and said, Write the vision, and [d]make it plain upon tables,[1] that he may run that readeth it.

3 For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because [b]it will surely come, it will not tarry.

4 Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: [k]but the just shall live by his faith.

5 ¶ [§]Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people:

6 Shall not all these [r]take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, [l]Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay!

7 Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?

8 Because [x]thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee; because of men's *blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

9 ¶ Woe to him [b]that †coveteth an evil covetousness to his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the ‡power of evil!

10 Thou hast consulted shame to thy house by cutting off many people, and hast *sinned against thy soul.

11 For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the [§]beam out of the timber shall [l]answer it.

12 ¶ Woe to him that buildeth a town with *blood, and stablisheth a city by iniquity!

13 Behold, is it not of the LORD of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves †for very vanity?

14 For [l]the earth shall be filled ‡with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

15 ¶ Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink,[2] that puttest thy bottle to him, and makest him drunken also, that thou mayest look on their nakedness!

16 Thou art filled [§]with shame for glory: drink thou also, [o]and let thy foreskin be uncovered: the cup of the LORD's right hand shall be turned unto thee, and shameful spewing shall be on thy glory.

17 For the violence of Lebanon shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts, which made them afraid, because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

18 ¶ What profiteth the graven image that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten image, and a teacher of lies,[3] [x]that the [l]maker of his work trusteth therein to make [y]dumb idols?

19 Woe unto him that saith to the wood, Awake; to the dumb stone, Arise, it shall teach! Behold, [a]it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it.

20 But [b]the LORD is in his holy temple: *let all the earth keep silence before him.

3 ¶ God came from [§]Teman, and the Holy One from mount [b]Paran. [l]Selah. [k]His glory covered the heavens, [l]and the earth was full of his praise.

4 And his brightness was as the light; he had [l]horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power.

5 Before him went the pestilence, and *burning coals went forth at his feet.

6 He stood, [q]and measured the earth: he beheld, [r]and drove asunder the nations; and [s]the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow: [t]his ways are everlasting.

7 I saw the tents of †Cushan ‡in affliction: and the curtains of the land of [x]Midian did tremble.

8 Was [y]the LORD displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses, and thy chariots [§]of salvation?

nary way, God not only speaks "to us" by his word, but speaks "in us" by our own consciences, whispering to us, "This is the way, walk in it;" and we must attend to the voice of God in both. The prophet's standing upon "his tower," or high place, speaks his "prudence," in making use of the helps and means he had within his reach, to know the mind of God, and to be instructed concerning it. Those that expect to hear from God, must withdraw from the world, and get above it, must raise their attention, fix their thought, study the Scriptures, consult experiences and the experienced, continue instant in prayer, and thus "set themselves upon the tower." His "standing upon his watch," speaks his "patience," his constancy, and resolution; he will wait the time, and weather the point, as a watchman does, but he will have an answer; he will know what God will "say to him," not only for his own satisfaction, but to enable him as a prophet to give satisfaction to others, and answer their expectations, when he is "reproved," or "argued" with.—Henry.

PRIDE AND ITS OVERTHROW.—Ver. 12—14. Nebuchadnezzar was very proud of great Babylon, which he had builded for himself: but this work was performed at the expense of immense bloodshed, and the iniquity thus contracted brought down the wrath of God on his posterity. He had exposed himself and his soldiers to vast fatigue, hardship, and peril in his wars; and he had wearied his subjects and vassals, as if they had laboured in the fire, whilst they builded the walls, castles, temples, and palaces of Babylon: and all this was in fact for very vanity. For that city would soon be taken by the Medes and Persians; the monarchy and royal family would be ruined, the seat of empire removed, and Babylon itself at length entirely destroyed. Indeed, it was the righteous purpose of God, to permit the Chaldeans and their associates, to be thus harassed and wearied, in order to punish their idolatry, and their oppression of his worshippers: and he intended to destroy that city, in order to show his glory to the whole earth, by redeeming Israel and replenishing Jerusalem; that there the Redeemer might appear, and that his gospel might spread from thence, to fill the earth with the knowledge of the glorious perfections, truth, and salvation of the Lord, with the worship of his name, and obedience to his will, even as the waters deeply and entirely overspread the whole channel of the seas.—This universal spread of the gospel will follow the ruin of the New-Testament Babylon; that city which hath been builded with blood and iniquity, and where the people have been left to labour in the fire, and to weary themselves for the veriest vanities, in idolatries, superstitions, will-worship, and fruitless efforts to preserve an usurped authority. It is therefore evident that these events also were intended.—"God's providence in governing the world shall conspicuously appear in the downfall of the Babylonian empire; especially as it is described by the prophets, as an earnest and type of the fall of mystical Babylon, which will be a decisive stroke, that will thoroughly vindicate oppressed truth and innocence." [Lowth.]

ADORATION.—Ver. 20. Opposed to these false and imaginary objects of worship, JEHOVAH was here revealed, as dwelling in his sanctuary among his people; that is, in Christ, in his church, and amidst his worshippers in heaven and earth. "The true God has his throne in heaven, whence he will answer the prayers of his servants, though the temple at Jerusalem should be destroyed." [Lowth.]—He is the sovereign Lord of all, to whom all worship, honour, and obedience are due: let all the earth keep silence before him, not daring to oppose his truth or provoke his wrath; but submitting quietly to his rebuke, humbly adoring his perfections, accepting of his salvation, and obeying his will without objecting, murmuring, or disputing.—"It alludes to such a silence, as is kept in courts of justice, when a judge pronounces the sentence." [Lowth.]—Scott.

CHAP. III. DIVINE GLORY.—Ver. 3, 4. God appeared in his glory, so as he never did before or since. "He came from Teman, even the Holy One from mount Paran." This refers to the visible display of the glory of God, when he gave the law upon mount Sinai, as appears by Deut. xxxiii. 2, whence these expressions are borrowed. Then "the Lord came down" upon Mount Sinai in a cloud, Exod. xix. 20, and his glory was "as the devouring fire;" not only to enforce the law he then gave them, but to "avow" the deliverance he had wrought for them, and to "magnify" it; for the first word he said there was, "'I am the Lord thy God, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt.' I that appear in this glory, am the Author of that work." Then "his glory covered the heavens," which shone with the reflection of that glorious appearance of his; the "earth also" was "full of his praise," or of his "splendour," so some read it. People at a distance saw the "cloud" and "fire" on the top of mount Sinai, and "praised" the God of Israel, or the "earth was full" of those works of God, which were to be "praised." His "brightness was as the light," as the light of the sun when he goes forth in his strength; "he had horns," or "bright beams," (so it should be rendered,) "coming out of his side" or "hand;" rays of glory were darted forth around him; and with some rays borrowed thence it was that Moses's face shone when "he came down from" that "mount" of glory. Some by the horns, the "two horns" (for the word is dual) "coming out of his hand," understand the "two tables of the law," which, perhaps, when God delivered them to Moses, though they were tables of stone, had a glory round them; those books were gilt with beams, and so it agrees with Deut. xxxiii. 2. "From his right hand went a fiery law for them." It is added, "And there was the hiding of his power;" there was his hidden power, in the rays that came out of his hand; the operations of his power,

IT is probable that Zephaniah delivered these prophecies towards the close of Josiah's reign, when religion was greatly declined in Judah, through the hypocrisy of those who had concurred in the reformation of that pious king. compared with what he could have done, were rather the "hiding" of it than the "discovery" of it; the "secrets" of his "power," as well as of his "wisdom," are "double to that which is," Job xi. 6.—Henry.

NATURE BOWING TO GOD.—Ver. 9, 10. "The question asked in a very bold and poetical manner, in the eighth verse, is answered in the ninth; that God displayed his power to deliver his people, according to his faithful word." [Bp. Newcombe.] The Lord appeared as a mighty warrior to fight for Israel, and made his bow, (here put for all the weapons of war,) quite naked, as openly prepared for the assault. This accorded to his oath and word of promise, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in behalf of their descendants, the tribes of Israel, to give them the land of Canaan. Therefore the Lord "did cleave," or divide, "the rivers of the earth," to open them a passage to their promised inheritance; and the mountains, as if conscious of JEHOVAH'S presence with his people, trembled and quaked. The overflowing waters of the Read Sea, or of Jordan, removed to make way for them; and being piled up as walls or mountains, they seemed to celebrate the praises of their Creator's power, and to lift up their hands in admiration and adoration of him. A most emphatic, sublime, and bold poetical figure!—Some, however, understand the last clause in the ninth verse, of the rivers of waters miraculously flowing from the rock, when smitten by the rod of Moses, and following the camp of Israel, during their wanderings in the wilderness. Ver. 11. The sacred poet and prophet, in the midst of his rapturous praises, cannot be supposed to have attended to exactness of method. He therefore suddenly passed from the power of God displayed in dividing the sea and Jordan, to that shown, when the sun and moon were stayed in their course, whilst Joshua was fighting with the Canaanites. They stood still in their tabernacle, the firmament of heaven. They stopped, and again moved; they shone, and then set, as best coincided with the Lord's plan when he fought for Israel: for his arrows and "the lightning of his spear," his manifested power, truth, and love to his people, shone so bright as to eclipse their feeble beams.—Scott.

CHAP. I. THE BOOK.—Ver. 1. Here is, The title-page of this book, in which we observe, 1. What authority it has, and who gave it that authority; it is from heaven, and not of men. It is "the word of the Lord." 2. Who was the instrument of conveying it to the church. His name, Zephaniah, which signifies the servant of the Lord, for God "revealed his secrets to his servants the prophets." The pedigree of other prophets, whose extraction we have an account of, goes no further back than their father, except Zecharias, whose grandfather also is named. But this of Zephaniah goes back four generations, and the highest mentioned is "Hizkiah;" it is the very same name in the original with that of Hezekiah king of Judah, 2 Kin. xviii. 1, and refers, probably, to him; if so, our prophet, being lineally descended from that pious prince, and being of the royal family, could with better grace reprove the folly of the "king's children," as he does, ver. 8. 3. When this prophet prophesied; "in the days of Josiah king of Judah," who reigned well, and in the twelfth year of his reign began vigorously, and carried on work of reformation, in which he destroyed idols and idolatry. Now it does not appear whether Zephaniah prophesied in the beginning of his reign; if so, we may suppose his prophesying had a great and good influence in that reformation. When he, as God's messenger, reproved the idolatries of Jerusalem, Josiah, as God's vicegerent, removed them; and reformation is likely "then" to go on and prosper, when both magistrates and ministers do their part toward it. If it were toward the latter end of his reign that he prophesied, we sadly see how a corrupt people relapse into their former distempers. The idolatries Joshua had abolished, it should seem, returned in his own time, when the heat of the reformation began a little to abate and wear off. What good can the best reformers do with a people that "hate" to be "reformed," as if they "longed" to be "ruined?"—Henry.

THE DAY OF GOD.—Ver. 7, 8. The people were ordered to keep silence, and not murmur or object to the execution, that was to take place in the approaching day of the Lord; for the slaughter of the wicked would be a sacrifice to his justice, which he had invited the Chaldeans and their confederates to feast upon.—"This alludes to the custom of those that offered sacrifice, which was to invite their friends to partake of the feast which accompanied it." [Lowth.] In that day the princes and even the king's children would be punished. For though Josiah set his sons a good example, and doubtless gave them good instructions; yet they were very wicked, and shared abundantly in the public calamities. Jehoahaz died a captive in Egypt; Jehoiakim by a violent death; and Zedekiah, having seen his sons slaughtered, had his eyes put out, was carried to Babylon, and died there. Such of the Jews also would be punished, as were weary of the dress of their country, and clothed themselves with the strange apparel of idolaters, as desirous of being in all respects conformed to them.—"The text may likewise be explained of such men as wore women's apparel, and such women as wore that belonging to men; which was contrary to an express law, and was a rite observed in the worship of some idols." [Lowth.] "The courtiers did imitate the strange apparel of other nations, to win their favour, thereby, and to appear glorious in the eyes of all others."

EXPOSURE.—Ver. 12. The Lord determined to detect, expose, and punish those secret idolatries, iniquities, and impieties, which had escaped all human observation. He would search every retired corner; as men search with candles for stolen goods: and no concealed abomination would then escape conviction or punishment. Or, "No corner would escape the Chaldeans, who should diligently search the houses and plunder the wealth of them." They especially would be punished, who were become daring through long-continued impunity and prosperity; as wine grows stronger and more heady, when it hath long settled on the lees: who had run into infidelity or atheism, and despised alike the promises and threatenings of God, saying in their hearts, that he would neither do good to his worshippers, nor punish his enemies.—"The thoughtless tranquillity of the rich is compared to the fixed unbroken surface of fermented liquors." [Bp. Newcombe.] —Scott.

CHAP. II. SUMMONS TO JUDGMENT.—Ver. 1—3. This exhortation to repentance plainly intimated, that the preceding denunciations of desolating judgments were "absolute," only because the Lord foreknew, that the nation would generally continue impenitent. —Judah was addressed as "a nation not desired;" God had delighted in his people, but he now no longer "desired" them; nay, he abhorred their odious crimes. Or it may be rendered, "not desirous;" that is, wholly careless respecting the favour, or wrath, of God. They were, however, ordered to gather together in a solemn assembly, to fast, and pray, and humble themselves before God: or, (as some render it,) "to examine themselves," that they might discover and repent of their sins. This must be done without delay; for "the decree" or sentence against them, was about "to bring forth" those desolations, which would put it out of their power to assemble. The day, allotted them for this purpose, would soon pass, as the chaff driven by the wind: and the fierce anger of God, in the day of his wrath, would speedily overtake them. But if the nation in general still neglected this duty, yet let the remnant of the meek and lowly, the humble, teachable, and peaceable, seek the Lord in fervent prayer. Though they were poor, despised, and afflicted: yet they had obeyed his commandments and adhered to his worship; or being truly penitent, they were now disposed to do so.—Scott.

RUIN OF NINEVEH.—Ver. 12—15. Observe, 1. How flourishing Nineveh's estate had formerly been. "This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly." Nineveh was so "strong" that she feared no "evil," and therefore "dwelt carelessly," and set danger at defiance; she was "so rich," that she thought herself sure of all "good," and therefore was a "rejoicing city," full of mirth and gaiety; and she had such a dominion, that she admitted no rival, but said in her heart, "'I am, and there is none beside me' that can compare with me, no city in the world that can pretend to be equal with me." God can with his judgments frighten the most secure, humble the most haughty, and mar the mirth of those that most "laugh now." 2. How complete Nineveh's ruin shall now be; it shall be made "a desolation." Such a heap of ruins shall this once pompous city be, that it shall be a receptacle for beasts, such a wilderness, that "flocks shall lie down in it;" nay, such a waste, desolate, frightful place, that wild beasts, the "beasts of the nations," all kinds of beasts, shall take up their abode there; the melancholy birds, as the "cormorant and bittern," shall make their nests in what remains of the houses, as they sometimes do in old ruinous buildings that are uninhabited and unfrequented. The lintels, or chapiters of the pillars, the "windows" and "thresholds," and all the fine "cedar-work" curiously engraven, shall lie exposed; and on them these rueful, ominous birds shall perch, and their "voice shall sing." How are the songs of mirth turned into hideous, horrid noises! What little reason have men to be proud of stately buildings, and rich furniture, when they know not what all the pomp of them may come to at last. —Henry.

CHAP. III. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—7. What a lamentable proof is it of the strength of human depravity, that Jerusalem should ever become an infamous, polluted, and oppressive city! But when this is the case with any part of the visible church, doubtless an awful wo will soon be denounced against it: for before such an event can take place, men must generally have been long habituated to disobey the voice of the Lord, to neglect his corrections and instructions, to withdraw their confidence from him, and to forsake, or hypocritically to attend on, his ordinances. It must also commonly arise from the misconduct of rulers and teachers; for when they become oppressive and iniquitous, or light and treacherous—when they pollute the sanctuary and pervert the law, they soon cause the people either to run into open impiety from abhorrence of their crimes, or into error and false religion in imitation of their examples, or by imbibing their doctrines. Yet it has too often been the case, that Zion's professed healers have proved her worst disease; and her princes, priests, and prophets, the most abandoned to impiety and vice; and neither the presence of the just Lord in his ordinances; nor his example, his word, his messages by his more faithful servants, or even his providential corrections, could put them to shame. In this case, warnings and deliverances only tend to increase men's condemnation; for whilst the Lord desolates cities and nations for their sins, he requires his professing people to fear him and receive instruction, that they may escape ruin; and yet they often grow more corrupt under warnings and corrections, and are more assiduous in doing evil than the most diligent believer is in doing good. Ver. 8—20. The remnant of godly persons, that live in evil times, may confidently wait upon the Lord, both to save them, and to terminate the success of his enemies. He will certainly arise to pour upon the wicked the fierceness of his anger, and

THE BOOK OF HAGGAI.

THE prophets whose writings have hitherto engaged our attention lived before, or during, the Babylonish captivity, and referred to it in most of their predictions; but the three that follow prophesied after the return of the Jews to their own land. Haggai delivered all the messages here recorded within four months. They relate to the building of the second temple, and contain reproofs, exhortations, and encouragements respecting that undertaking; and also predictions of Christ and His kingdom connected with them, nay, of the final and universal prevalence of the gospel.—The apostle Paul quotes Haggai, to prove that the prophets foretold one great revolution in the external state of the church, which would shortly take place, and only one (comp. ii. 6, 7 with Heb. xii. 26, 27).

the whole earth will be devoured by the fire of his jealousy; yet then will he peculiarly bless those that wait for him. When he casts off professed Christians for their hypocrisy, he will send his gospel to those who have hitherto sat in darkness; and his grace will render his people sincere in their professions, and holy in their conversation; teaching them a pure language, honourable to God, and edifying to men. Such persons should all call upon and serve the Lord with one consent; as "he seeketh those to worship him, who worship him in spirit and in truth." For this purpose, his gospel is sent into regions, divided from each other by mountains, rivers, and seas; and all, who become humble suppliants to him for salvation, through faith in Jesus Christ, are numbered amongst the genuine children of his church, and form a holy priesthood to offer spiritual sacrifices unto him, wherever they are dispersed. They are also all made partakers of true repentance and complete forgiveness, and none of them shall be put to shame, because of their former transgressions.—But the Lord will certainly cast out of his church all that rejoice in their pride, and are haughty because of those privileges which they abuse and idolize. He will exclude boasting, and leave no man any thing to glory in, save the Lord Jesus, "as made of God to him, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." All whom he saves, are made poor in spirit, and most of them are poor and afflicted in the world: but whilst they trust in him, they cannot but be rich, noble, wise, and happy. Their humiliation in themselves, and their obligations to the Redeemer, concur in forming them upright and sincere; a people that do no iniquity, speak no lies, neither is a deceitful tongue found in their mouths; though nothing is more common amongst many who profess, disgrace, and are proud of, the doctrines of the gospel; as their shops, customers, and those who depend on their word, too often can testify! But the sheep of Christ are harmless and inoffensive; they may securely rest upon his word, and repose their souls under his care; and he will feed them in his plenteous pastures, and preserve them from the power and terror of every enemy. Many indeed are the troubles of the righteous, from within and without: yet may they still rejoice in God, and triumph in his love. The King of Israel in the midst of them is the Lord of hosts; and he will soon take away their judgments, and save them so effectually, that they shall see evil no more for ever. Let us then encourage each other and ourselves against dejection, that our hands may not be slack, when we should work, or resist our enemies. The love of our mighty Redeemer is as large as his power: he rejoices to save the returning prodigal, to comfort the weeping penitent, to relieve the trembling suppliant, or to restore the wandering sheep: he delights in the objects of his choice, the purchase of his blood, the trophies of his victories, the work of his new-creating grace. He rests well-pleased in his love of his redeemed church, and exults with joy over every poor sinner, whom he hath taught to trust in his mercy, to love his name, to obey his commands, and to copy his example. Surely then our hearts should rejoice in him, when we hear such words of infinite condescension and grace.—Scott.

CHAP. I. GOD'S JUDGMENTS ON THE NATION.—Ver. 1—11. The cause of the withering and failing of the corn in the field was visible—it was for want of rain; but, beside that, there was a secret blast and curse attending that which they brought home. 1. When they had it in the barn, they were not sure of it; "I did blow upon it, saith the Lord of hosts," and that withered it, as buds are sometimes blasted in the spring by a nipping frost, which we see the effects of, but know not the way of. "I did blow it away;" so the margin reads it. When men have heaped wealth together, God can scatter it with the breath of his mouth as easily as we can "blow away" a feather. Note, We can never be sure of any thing in this world; it is exposed, not only when it is in the field, but when it is housed; for there "moth and rust corrupt," Matt. vi. 19. And if we would have the comfort and continuance of our temporal enjoyments, we must make God our Friend; for if he bless them to us, they are blessings indeed, but if he blow upon them, we can expect no good from them, they "make themselves wings and fly away." 2. When they had it upon the board, it was not that to them that they expected; "'Ye eat, but ye have not enough,' either because the meat is washy, and 'not satisfying,' or because the stomach is greedy, and not 'satisfied;' 'you eat,' but you have no good digestion, and so are not nourished by it, nor does it answer the end, or you have not enough, because you are not content, nor think it enough. 'Ye drink,' but are not cooled and refreshed by it, 'ye are not filled with drink;' you are stinted, and have not enough to quench your thirst. The 'new wine is cut off from your mouth,' Joel i. 5, nay, and you 'drink your water' too by 'measure, and with astonishment;' you have no comfort of it, because you have no plenty of it, but are still in fear of falling short." 3. That which they had upon their backs, did them no good there; "'Ye clothe you, but there is none warm,' your clothes soon wear out, and wax old, and grow thin, because God 'blows upon them;'" contrary to what Israel's did in the wilderness, when God "blessed them." It is God that "makes our garments warm upon" us, when he "quiets the earth," Job xxxvii. 17. 4. That which they had in their bags, which was not laid out, but laid up, they were not sure of; he that "earns wages" by hard labour, and has it paid him in ready current money, "puts it into a bag with holes;" it drops through, and wastes away insensibly. Every thing is so scarce and dear, that they spend their money as fast as they get it. Those that lay up their treasure on earth, "put it into a bag with holes;" they lose it as they go along, and they that come after 10 ¶ In [t]the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying,

12 If one bear holy flesh[3] in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, [x]So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; [x]and that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, [c]from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the Lord;

16 Since those days were, when one came to an heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.[4]

17 I smote you [e]with blasting, and with mildew, [f]and with hail, [g]in all the labours of your hands; [h]yet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 [i]Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, [k]even from the day that the foundation of the LORD'S temple was laid, consider it.

19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree, hath not brought forth: [l]from this day will I bless you.

NEGLECT OF GOD'S HOUSE.—Ver. 5—11. "Consider the plagues of God upon you for preferring your policy to his religion; and because you seek not him first of all."—The Lord next called the people to "consider their ways;" that is, not only their conduct and motives by way of self-examination, but also the state of their affairs; by which they would perceive that their conduct was as impolitic as it was irreligious. They well knew that their crops of corn had been very scanty, in proportion to the land tilled, or the seed sown. They had not a sufficiency of meat or drink, either through scarcity, or for want of a blessing; their clothes soon wore out, and did not defend them from the cold; and the hard-earned wages of the labourer or mechanic, seemed to be put into a bag with holes, they were so soon gone, through dearness of provisions and a variety of expenses. It was therefore expedient for them to review their conduct; and this would show them, that they should immediately, (though to the neglect of their own concerns,) go to mount Lebanon and prepare timber, and set about the building of the temple; and God would graciously take pleasure in it, as the centre of his worship and the type of Christ, though far inferior in magnificence to Solomon's temple; yea, he would deem himself glorified by it. They must know, that when they had used all proper means, had every probability, and had entertained the most sanguine expectations of a large increase, they were strangely disappointed; and even what they had brought home was unaccountably wasted; as if the Lord had blown upon it, and driven it away! And wherefore was this? Truly, because they neglected the temple and left it in ruins, whilst they eagerly employed themselves in building and decorating their own houses; and therefore they were visited by drought and famine, and various diseases both of man and beast.—Scott.

CHAP. II. COMING OF THE MESSIAH.—Ver. 5—9. Messiah would come at the appointed time, He, "the desire of all nations," whom all nations ought to desire, and in due time would desire; He, in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, and of whose coming a general expectation would prevail, as of some most desirable event; He would come, and his presence, who is the glory of the Lord and the true temple "in whom all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily," would fill that house with glory, and render it far more glorious than the Shechinah (or visible glory) rendered Solomon's temple. The Lord could, if he so pleased, enrich that house with silver and gold beyond the former temple; for all the treasures of the earth are his: but as a more spiritual dispensation was about to be introduced, he had a greater and a more spiritual glory to confer upon it, in the presence of Immanuel his Incarnate Son. Thither he would come as the Prince of peace: there he would preach, and confer peace: and in the meantime God would give peace to those, who worshipped there, in anticipation of the blessings of Messiah's reign.—The second temple could not excel the first in glory, in any other respect than this: it was indeed considerably beautified, decorated, and enriched in after ages, but nothing equal to the splendour of the temple in the days of Solomon: and the Jews allow, that the ark of the covenant, the visible glory, and some other things which distinguished the former temple, were wanting in this. But they cannot find any thing that is worthy to be mentioned, in which it was more glorious; though they have been excited to rack their invention to the utmost for that purpose. For as the second temple hath been destroyed above seventeen hundred years; if nothing else can be adduced, in which its glory exceeded that of Solomon's temple, it must be allowed that the presence of the promised Messiah was intended; and if this be yielded, it will undeniably follow that Jesus of Nazareth was he: and thus they must condemn their own obstinate rejection of him, concerning whom all their own prophets spoke. For in this alone did the glory of the latter house exceed that of the former, that the desire of all nations, the Lord of glory, came to it, personally and in human nature. So that this prophecy is alone sufficient to decide the controversy with them, seeing they allow the divine inspiration of Haggai.—Some indeed speak, as if Herod the Great entirely pulled down this temple and builded another: but the account of Josephus on that subject is not consistent with itself and with other writers, and seems rather penned in the style of panegyric than of history: and, however Herod repaired, beautified, and enlarged the out-buildings of the temple, it never was the general opinion of the Jews themselves, that he demolished the second temple, but that it continued the same till its destruction by the Romans. With that event the old dispensation ended; for the desire of all nations was come, and he erected his spiritual temple, as it were, upon the ruins of it.—The word rendered come, is plural, and it is with probability supposed, that the substantive should be plural also. "The desires of all the nations shall come." Some learned men, therefore, have argued, that the precious or desirable things, namely, the riches of the nations, are meant; and that it is a forced construction to interpret the passage of the Messiah. —"The objections to this interpretation are, the great solemnity of the introduction; and the impropriety of the language, 'The desirable things of all nations shall come,' when it should rather be said, 'The desirable things of all nations shall be brought.'—The word is used plurally, with the force of the singular, (like delicia, or spes, in Latin,) Dan. ix. 23, vir desideriorum, 'greatly beloved.' Cant. v. 16, we have—and ipse totus desideria, for desiderabilis." (There is a plural Hebrew noun of the same root,

THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH.

ZECHARIAH began to prophesy two months after Haggai; being raised up to be his coadjutor in exciting the Jews to rebuild the temple; but it is probable that he continued to exercise his prophetical office during a much longer time; though the visions and predictions, in the latter part of the book, are not dated. His prophetical character and usefulness are recorded by Ezra (Ezra v. 1, 2; vi. 14); and his book is repeatedly quoted and referred to, and thus sanctioned by the Word of God, in the New Testament (comp. ix. 9 with Matt. xxi. 4, 5, John xii. 14–16; xi. 12, 13 with Matt. xxvii. 7-10; xii. 10 with John xix. 34-37, Rev. i. 7; xiii. 7 with Matt. xxvi. 31, Mark xiv. 27).

CHAP. I.

Zechariah exhorteth to repentance, 1. Comfortable promises made to Jerusalem, 12.

IN the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto [b]Zechariah the son of Barachiah, the son of [c]Iddo the prophet, saying,

2 The LORD hath been [*]sore displeased with your fathers.

3 Therefore say thou unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [c]Turn ye unto me, saith the LORD of hosts, [f]and I will turn unto you, saith the LORD of hosts.

4 Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets have cried, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [i]Turn ye now from your evil ways, and from your evil doings: [k]but they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith the LORD.

5 Your fathers, [l]where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever?

6 But my words and my statutes, which I commanded my servants the prophets, did they not [†]take hold of your fathers? and they returned and said, [o]Like as the LORD of hosts thought to do unto us, according to our ways, and according to our doings, so hath he dealt with us.

7 ¶ Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat,[1] in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD unto Zechariah the son of Barachiah, the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

8 I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon[2] a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle-trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there red horses, [‡]speckled, and white.

9 Then said I, O my lord, what are these? And [s]the angel that talked with me said unto me, I will shew thee what these be.

10 And the man that stood[3] among the myrtle-trees answered and said, These are they whom the LORD hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And they [e]answered the angel of the LORD that stood among the myrtle-trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.

12 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD answered and said, O LORD of hosts, [g]how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem, and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?

13 And the LORD answered the angel that talked with me [l]with good words, and comfortable words.

14 So the angel that communed with me said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [m]I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion with a great jealousy.

15 And [n]I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease: [o]for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction.[4]

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD, [q]I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the LORD of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem.

17 Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, My cities through [§]prosperity shall as that here made use of, applied by the Spouse to her beloved, or by the church to Christ.—It is rendered "altogether lovely," but is more literally, altogether loveliness.)—"It may well be doubted, whether the second temple could exceed that of Solomon, in the splendour and costliness of its ornaments. Prideaux values the gold, with which the holy of holies alone was overlaid, at four millions three hundred and twenty thousand pounds sterling."—"It seems to me, that, supposing the Messiah to be prophesied of, greater precision in the language would not have been used: for this would have led the Jews to expect a demolition of the temple then building, and the erection of another in its stead.—No nominal distinction, between Zerubbabel's and Herod's temple, seems to have been ever made by the Jews: but in popular language, these structures, though really different, were spoken of as the same. On one occasion, Josephus himself mentions only two buildings of the temple; a former in the time of Solomon; and a latter in that of Cyrus.—In Chronicon Hebraeum, &c., Vespasian is said to have destroyed the temple four hundred and forty years after it was rebuilt." [Bp. Newcombe.]—No more than seven years were spent in building Solomon's temple, and only four in building the second temple, from the time when the Jews resumed the work: it is therefore most evident, that Herod never pulled down the temple, in order to erect a new one. There was a temple for the worship of JEHOVAH according to the law, during all the forty-six years which were spent in repairing or rebuilding it.—One part must therefore have been taken down at once, as far as needful for the purpose, and no more: but the old foundation, and many parts of the structure, no doubt, remained.—Whoever compares the sixth chapter of the first of Kings, even with the most splendid accounts of the second temple, however adorned with costly stones, &c., must perceive that the former being overlaid in every part with pure gold, gave it a glory, of this kind, which was incomparably beyond that of the second temple, in its highest magnificence: and the prophecy clearly means, that the glory of the second temple should exceed the glory which the first had at any time been favoured with.—Nothing but the presence of the incarnate Son of God could fulfil this prediction.—Scott.

CHAP. I. THE AUTHOR.—Ver. 1. Barachiah. Matt. xxiii. 34—36. It is the general opinion of expositors that our Lord, in the passage referred to, means Zechariah the son of Jehoiada. Yet some reasons may be alleged, which at least render it probable, that the prophet Zechariah was intended. For why should "the son of Jehoiada" be called "the son of Barachiah" in the Gospel? Chrysostom, indeed, asserts that Jehoiada was also called Barachiah, which [illegible] the Lord," as "Jehoiada does one that confesses him:" but [illegible] proof in Scripture that he was ever so called; and if the son of Jehoiada be meant, an alteration of the text in Matthew must be admitted, which is not advisable, unless absolutely unavoidable. Zechariah was a young man when he began to prophesy, chap. ii. 4; he might live long after the temple was finished, and after the death of Zerubbabel and Joshua.—Zechariah of Iddo is mentioned among the priests, in the days of Joiakim, the son of Joshua, Neh. xii. 16; and tradition reports that Zechariah was of the sacerdotal line. It is not peculiarly improbable that the Jews, exasperated by his faithful expostulations, should murder him in the inner court of the temple: and the canon of Scripture, being previously closed, could not record it, any more than the martyrdom of those who suffered under Antiochus Epiphanes. The silence of Josephus proves nothing,—as he uniformly, when he can, passes over, or palliates, whatever he thinks dishonourable to his people. The transaction might, however, be well known in our Lord's time, by tradition or authentic history. But, especially, let it be considered how far it might have been previously expected, that the murder of one who suffered before the persecuting reigns of Ahaz, Manasseh, and Jehoiakim, (during which more innocent blood was shed, and more prophets were slaughtered, than in all preceding ages,) should be mentioned as the last of the righteous persons, whose blood would be required of the generation which crucified the Messiah.—The blood shed "after the death" of Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, especially filled up the measure of national wickedness, and brought on Judah the Babylonish captivity; yet on this supposition it is wholly passed over by our Lord. But if Zechariah the prophet were meant, and if he were murdered after the captivity, as the other Zechariah had been before, the whole appears natural, and probably he might be the last eminent person who thus suffered.

VISION—MAN UPON THE RED HORSE.—Ver. 8—11. The prophet saw in a vision, by night, (as denoting, perhaps, the afflicted state of the Jews at that time,) a "man," one in human form, even the Son of God, who afterwards became "man" for our salvation; and he sat like a warrior upon a red horse, as about to execute vengeance on the enemies of his people. He was stationed "in the bottom," or in a low valley (denoting both the humility and low estate of the church,) "among myrtle trees," an apt emblem of true believers: and behind him were other horses with riders upon them. These seem to have been emblematic of the angels, as ministers of providence under Christ, who waited on him, being ready to execute his commands: and the diverse colours of their horses may denote the different dispensations of wrath or mercy, or both blended together, which they superintended. When the prophet saw these things, being inquired [illegible] who commanded with him, what their errand [illegible] evident, that he stands in [illegible] Hosea and [illegible] for the man, who stood among the myrtle trees, informed the prophet, that these were they whom JEHOVAH had commissioned to go throughout the earth, and to examine the state of it. And immediately the other angel, as having returned from executing this commission, showed this angel that all the earth was still and at rest. So that the person called the man is also spoken of, as "the angel of the LORD."—The Persian king reigned peaceably over his vast dominions. Even the Chaldeans at that time lived quietly under him, and other nations were remarkably at rest, whilst the church was in great affliction and abasement.—Having given this answer, they seem to have waited for another commission. "The man, or angel, denotes the Logos, or Son of God, appearing as the captain of God's hosts, or armies, Josh. v. 13, 14.—They answer this man, or angel, as if he were their superior or commander." [Lowth.]—"I had a vision by night; Christ, the angel of the covenant, represented himself to me, as a man riding on a red horse; and behind him were several angels, ready to attend his commands.—And the great angel of the covenant, (as taking the answer out of the mouth of that angel that spake to me,) answered and said, These are ministering spirits, whom the Lord hath sent to take a view of all the parts of the world." [Bp. Hall.]—"The Persian empire, and the other nations connected with Judea, enjoyed peace at that time; but the state of the Jews was unsettled, which circumstance gives occasion to the following intercession." [Bp. Newcombe.]—"All the enemies of the Persian empire in general, and of the Jews in particular, are quiet: so that this seems a proper time for setting forward the building of the temple, which has been so long interrupted." [Lowth.]—Scott.

CHAP. II. DIVINE PROTECTION TO THE CHURCH.—Ver. 5. The church is "as safe" and "great" as the "presence of God" can make it. 1. It shall be safe, for God himself will be a "wall of fire round about it." Jerusalem had no walls about it at this time, but lay naked and exposed; formerly, when it had walls, the enemies not only broke them, but broke them down; but now "God will be unto her a wall of fire." Some think it alludes to shepherds that made fires about their flocks, or travellers that made fires about their tents, in desert places, to frighten wild beasts from them. God will not only "make a hedge" about them, as he did about Job, chap. i. 10; not only walls and bulwarks about them, Isa. xxvi. 1, (those may be battered down;) not only be as the mountains round about them, Ps. cxxv. 2, (mountains may be got over;) but he will be a "wall of fire" round them, which can neither be broken through, nor scaled, nor undermined, nor the foundations of it sapped, nor can it be attempted or approached, without danger to the assailants. God will not only make a wall of fire about her, but he will himself be such a wall: for "our God is a consuming fire" to his and his church's enemies. He is a "wall of fire," not on one side only, but "round about" on every side. —Henry.

BLESSING OF CHRISTIAN TIMES.—Ver. 10—13. This seems to be an express prediction of the coming of Christ in human nature, to dwell in the midst of his church. The daughter of Zion, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, were called on to rejoice and sing, because he would come and dwell among them; for he was "the glory of his people Israel." But he was also to be "a light to the Gentiles;" and many nations "in that day," would renounce their idolatry, and join themselves to the Lord as his worshippers, among whom he would dwell; and by this the Jews would know that the Lord of hosts had sent him to them. Let the reader attentively mark the language; "many nations shall be joined to Jehovah; and they shall be my people, and I will dwell," &c.—It is evident that Jehovah here speaks; yet he adds, "Thou shalt know that Jehovah of hosts hath sent me unto thee."—It is the singular number. The prophet should know that Jehovah of hosts had sent that person to him, who spake in the name of the Lord; not the people, that Jehovah had sent the prophet to them. It seems impossible that this language should be mistaken, except it be disregarded. Few passages, even in the New Testament, more clearly speak of distinct persons, in the unity of the Godhead, than this does.—Scott.

CHAP. III. JOSHUA THE HIGH PRIEST.—Ver. 1—4. The prophet next saw "Joshua the high priest standing before the angel of the Lord," (or the Angel-JEHOVAH,) as a criminal upon his trial: or rather as Israel's representative, officiating in his ministry, and seeking a blessing upon his afflicted people. While he thus stood before Christ, Satan appeared at his right hand, as his adversary and accuser, to resist him, and to show cause why he should not be accepted in his services, or why he should be condemned: by which the subtle and malicious endeavours of the devil to discourage the servants of God from their work, or to defeat the success of it, were meant. But the LORD, the Angel-JEHOVAH, Christ, before whom Joshua stood, said to Satan "JEHOVAH rebuke thee, even the LORD who hath chosen Jerusalem, rebuke thee," &c. It could not be denied that Joshua, and the other priests, and the people, were in many things very faulty; but Satan's accusations arose from enmity to God and his cause, and not from any dislike to their unworthiness; and therefore he ought to be rebuked and silenced.—Scott.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, [k]Not by [‡]might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Who art thou, [l]O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, [°]Grace, grace, unto it.

5 ¶ Then [k]the angel that talked with me went forth, and said unto me, [l]Lift up now thine eyes, and see what is this that goeth forth.

truth and holiness, in this dark world. The lamps of the candlestick in the sanctuary were supplied by the priests, in the ordinary manner: but this was supplied in a supernatural way: for there was a bowl, or common reservoir, placed on the top of the candlestick, at an equal distance from each of the seven lamps; and from this bowl were seven pipes, through which the oil gradually ran of itself, to supply each of them as it was wanted. At the same time, two olive-trees were growing, one on each side of the bowl; and a branch of each of them, being nearest to it, distilled of its own accord abundance of the finest oil of a golden colour, through a golden pipe into the bowl; from which the lamps were replenished, through the seven pipes, ver. 11, 12. Beyond doubt, this represented the abundance of divine grace, for the illumination and sanctification of the ministers and members of the church, which is treasured up in Christ, to be from him dispensed through his ordinances, to every individual in all parts of the world, as occasions and circumstances may require; and which cannot be procured, or precluded, by any human power, but is communicated, according to the methods which he had established, and revealed in his word.—Scott.

THE POWER OF GOD'S SPIRIT.—Ver. 6. It was by the "Spirit of the Lord of hosts" that the people were excited and animated to build the temple; and "therefore" they are said to be "helped by the prophets of God," because they, as the Spirit's mouth, "spake" to their hearts, Ezra v. 2. It was by the same Spirit that the heart of Darius was inclined to favour and further that good work, and that the sworn enemies of it were infatuated in their counsels, so that they could not hinder it as they designed. Note, The work of God is often carried on very successfully, when yet it is carried on very silently, and without the assistance of human force; the gospel-temple is built, not by might or power, (for "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal,") but by the "Spirit of the Lord of hosts," whose work on men's consciences is mighty to the pulling down of strong holds; thus the excellency of the power is of God, and not of man. When instruments fail, let us therefore leave it to God to do his work himself by his own Spirit.—Henry.

FURTHER EXPLANATIONS OF THE CANDLESTICK.—Ver. 11—14. The prophet was still ignorant of the meaning of the two olive-trees, especially of those branches from which the oil was more immediately conveyed to the lamps: and upon inquiry he learned, that "they were the two anointed ones, which stood before the Lord of the whole earth." Zerubbabel and Joshua, the anointed ruler and high priest of Judah, who stood before the Lord, and were his instruments in the work of the temple, were the anointed ones intended: but they were only types and shadows, (as the temple itself was,) of him that was to come.—Scott.

CHAP. V. THE FLYING ROLL.—Ver. 1—4. The preceding visions were replete with encouragement to the pious rulers and people of Judah; but these bear a gloomy aspect, both towards obstinate sinners, and towards the whole nation in process of time.—The prophet's attention was called to a flying roll. He saw several skins of parchment, or other such materials, joined together and written upon, flying in the air; which seemed to him to be above ten yards long and five yards wide: and his divine Instructor informed him, that they represented the curse, which would go through the whole land against wicked persons. The Lord would bring it forth, as the rule of judgment, and he would deal with every one according to it. So that the thief being condemned by one part of it, would be cut off according to it; the perjured person being condemned by another part of it, would be cut off according to it; and in like manner, with other criminals. For the curse would enter into the house of the thief, the perjured person, &c. and abide there, till it had destroyed all the riches, comfort, and credit of him and his family; even as if it had consumed the stones and timber of his habitation. The large size of the roll might intimate, that it not only contained all the curses written in the law, and denounced by the prophets; but also an account of all the sins of those, against whom it was sent forth: its flying might signify, that it continually hovered over, and would speedily light on, the heads of the impenitent: and the two crimes of theft and false swearing might be mentioned as a compendium of the two tables of the law.

THE WOMAN IN THE EPHAH.—Ver. 5—11. On the top of the ephah was suspended a talent of lead, as a ponderous cover for it. In the ephah sat a woman, the emblem of the Jewish nation: and the angel cast something into the measure, which he told the prophet was wickedness; denoting that he kept an exact account of their sins, and would put them all with the nation into the measure, and only bear with the people till that should be full: for the emblem requires, and the language implies, that the wickedness put into the ephah, should be distinct from the woman. At length the weight of lead was cast on the mouth of the ephah, by which the woman that sat in it, and the wickedness cast into it, would both be so closed up, as no more to be extricated. This seems to mean the condemnation of the nation, after the Jews had filled up the measure of their iniquities by crucifying Christ and rejecting his gospel. The two women with wings like a stork, and the wind in their wings, seem to have been emblematic of the Roman armies and their rapid conquests, coming speedily at the call of Christ to execute his righteous sentence on that devoted nation.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. THE FOUR CHARIOTS.—Ver. 1—8. Angels are called the Lord's chariots. By them he goes forth to execute his providential will on earth. The chariot with red forth into the north country; and the white go forth after them; and the grisled go forth toward the south country.

7 And the bay went forth, and sought to go, that they might walk to and fro through the earth: and he said, Get you hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth.

8 Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country.

9 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

10 Take of them of the captivity, even of Heldai, of Tobijah, and of Jedaiah, which are come from Babylon, and come thou the same day, and go into the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah;

11 Then take silver and gold,[2] and make crowns, and set them upon the head of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest;

12 And speak unto him, saying, Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, [y]Behold the man [z]whose name is The BRANCH; and he shall [‡]grow up out of his place, and [a]he shall build the temple of the LORD:

13 Even he shall build the temple of the LORD; and he shall [b]bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be [c]a priest upon his throne: [d]and the counsel of peace shall be between them both.

14 And the crowns shall be to [e]Helem, and to Tobijah, and to Jedaiah, and to Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in the temple of the LORD.

15 And they that are far off shall come[3] and build in the temple of the LORD; and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto you. And this shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of the LORD your God.

3 And to speak unto the priests[1] which were in the house of the LORD of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so many years?

4 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD of hosts unto me, saying,

[2] A plate or crown of gold was an ornament placed upon the mitre of the high priest (see Ex. xxviii. 36; xxix. 6; Lev. viii. 9). Two such crowns are here ordered to be made, and to be placed upon the head of Joshua, to signify that the Messiah, "the Branch," spoken of in the next verse, of whom Joshua was a type, should be both a king and a priest, and have a right to wear the crown of both.—LOWTH.

13 Therefore it is come to pass, that as he cried, and they would not hear; so they cried, and I would not hear, saith the LORD of hosts:

horses may represent the execution of his vengeance, by raising up bloody conquerors to waste guilty nations; that with black horses the dreadful judgments of famine and pestilence, which often follow the desolations of war: the white horses may signify the removal of those judgments, by returning peace, health, and plenty; and the grisled and bay may denote dispensations mingled with wrath and mercy; or those lighter judgments that are more common in the world. Accordingly, the angel interpreted the vision to signify "the four spirits of the heavens;" that is, celestial spirits, sent forth from God, to execute his purposes in the different parts of the earth. The red had already gone forth, and were executing their commission, in the wars by which the Persian kings wasted the Chaldeans and other nations in those parts; the black were about to follow them into the north country; and then the white would go forth after them. But the grisled were about to go towards the south, into Egypt, and other countries to the south of Judah: yet the bay which were connected with them sought to go to and fro through the earth, and obtained permission so to do.

JOSHUA THE HIGH PRIEST.—A TYPE OF CHRIST.—Ver. 12, 13. Joshua was directed, by this typical action, to behold the "Man, whose name is the BRANCH;" the divine Saviour, who would in due time assume human nature, as a Branch from the root of Jesse. He would certainly grow up out of his place, from a virgin of the family of David, in the city of Bethlehem, where he would be born; and then from small beginnings he would grow up to extraordinary greatness and honour. He, and he only, would build the true temple of the Lord, (of which Solomon's temple, and that which Zerubbabel and Joshua were building, were types;) consisting of the whole company of redeemed sinners, quickened and converted by divine grace, and made "an habitation of God through the Spirit." He would bear and be able to sustain the exceeding weight of that glory, which would redound to him, as having planned and erected this spiritual edifice. For after his humiliation on earth, he would be advanced in human nature to the mediatorial throne, "angels, principalities, and powers, being made subject to him;" "all power in heaven and earth being given to him;" and all the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him, in order to the completion of this great design; of which he will have the whole glory from all the company of the redeemed, and from the angels in heaven, to all eternity. On this throne he would be established, till all enemies should be put under his feet. And he would be a priest as well as a king upon his throne.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. HYPOCRITICAL FASTING.—Ver. 5. They had not an eye to God in their fasting; "Did ye at all fast unto me, even to me?" He appeals to their own consciences, they will witness against them, that they had not been sincere in it, much more will God, who is greater than the heart, and knows all things. You know very well that "you did not at all fast to me; in fasting did you fast to me?" There was the carcass, and form of the duty, but none of the life, and soul, and power, of it. Was it "to me," even "to me?" The repetition intimates what a great deal of stress is laid upon this as the main matter, in that and other holy exercises, that they be done "to God," even "to him," with an eye to his word as our rule, and his glory as our end, in them, seeking to please him and to obtain his favour, and studious by the sincerity of our intentions to approve ourselves to him. When this was wanting, every fast was but a jest. To fast, and not fast "to God," was to mock him and provoke him, and could not be pleasing to him. Those that make fasting a cloak for sin, as Jezebel's fast, or by it make their court to men for their applause, as the Pharisees, or that rest in outward expressions of humiliation, while their hearts are unhumbled, as Ahab, do they "fast to God, even to him? Is this the fast that God has chosen?" Isa. lviii. 5.

PUNISHMENT THE EFFECT OF SIN.—Ver. 14. "Therefore came great wrath from the Lord of hosts." God was highly displeased with them, and justly; he required nothing of them but what was reasonable in itself, and beneficial to them; and yet they refused, and in a most insolent manner too. What master could bear to be so abused by his own servant? Such an implacable enmity to the gospel as this was to the law and the prophets, was that which brought "wrath to the uttermost" upon the last generation of the Jewish church, 1 Thess. ii. 16. Great sins against "the Lord of hosts," whose authority is incontestible, bring "great wrath from the Lord of hosts," whose power is irresistible. And the effect was, 1. As they had turned a deaf ear to God's word, "so" God turned a deaf ear to their prayers. "As he cried" to them in their prosperity, to leave their sins, "and they would not hear," but persisted in their iniquities; so "they cried to him" in the day of their trouble, to remove his judgments, and he would not hear, but lengthened out their calamities. 2. As they flew off from their duty and allegiance to God, and were of desultory and unsettled spirits, so God "dissipated" them, and threw them about as chaff before "a whirlwind; he scattered them among all the nations whom they knew not," and whom therefore they could not expect to receive any kindness from. 3. As they violated all the laws of their land, so God took away all the glories of it. "Their land was desolate after them, and no man passed through or returned." All that country that was the kingdom of the two tribes, after the dispersion of the remaining Jews, upon the slaughter of Gedaliah, was left utterly uninhabited.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. THE COVENANT RENEWED.—Ver. 8. God would renew his covenant with them, would be faithful to them, and make them so to him. "They shall be my 6 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, If it be [†]marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be marvellous in mine eyes? saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will save my people from the east country, and from the [‡]west country;[2]

8 And I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; [1]and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness.

9 ¶ Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Let your hands be strong, ye that hear in these days these words by the mouth of the prophets, which were in the day that the foundation of the house of the LORD of hosts was laid, that the temple might be built.

10 For before these days [§]there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in because of the affliction: for I set all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But now I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 For [*]the seed shall be [l]prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew; and I will cause the remnant of this people [x]to possess all these things.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the LORD of hosts, and I repented not;

15 So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah: fear ye not.

16 ¶ These are the things that ye shall do, [b]Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; [*]execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates:

17 And let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and [k]love no false oath: for all these are [l]things that I hate, saith the LORD.

20 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, It shall yet come to pass, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

21 And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go [‡]speedily to pray before the LORD, and to seek the LORD of hosts:[4] [§]I will go also.

22 Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the LORD of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the LORD.

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you; for [b]we have heard that God is with you.

God defendeth his church, 1. Zion is exhorted to rejoice for the coming of Christ, 9.

THE burden of the word of the LORD in the land of Hadrach, and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the LORD.

2 And Hamath also shall border thereby; Tyrus, and Zidon, though it be very wise.

3 And Tyrus did build herself a strong-hold, and heaped up silver as the dust, and fine gold as the mire of the streets.[1]

4 Behold, [1]the LORD will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire.

5 Ashkelon shall see it, and fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful; and Ekron; for her expectation shall be ashamed; and the king shall perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.

6 And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod; and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And I will take away his [*]blood out of his mouth,[2] and his abominations from between his teeth: but he that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God; and he shall be as [x]a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.

8 And I will encamp about mine house because of the army, because of him that passeth by, and because of him that returneth; and no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for now have I seen with mine eyes.

9 ¶ Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion;[3] shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: [*]behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and [†]having salvation; [§]lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.

10 And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battle-bow shall be cut off: and [k]he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and [l]his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth.

11 As for thee also, [‡]by the blood of thy people, and I will be their God." That is the foundation and crown of all these promises, and is inclusive of all happiness. They shall obey God's laws, and God will secure and advance all their interests. This contract shall be made, shall be new-made, "in truth" and "in righteousness." Some think that the former speaks God's part of the covenant: he will be "their God in truth," he will make good all his promises of favour to them; the latter, it is thought, speaks man's part of the covenant; they shall be his people in "righteousness," they shall be a "righteous" people, and shall abound in the "fruits of righteousness," and shall not, as they have done, deal treacherously and unjustly with their God, see Hos. ii. 19, 20. God will never leave nor forsake them in a way of mercy, as he has promised them; and they shall never leave or forsake him in a way of duty, as they have promised him. These promises were fulfilled in the flourishing state of the Jewish church, for some ages, betwixt the captivity and Christ's time; they were to have a further and a fuller accomplishment in the gospel-church, that "heavenly Jerusalem," which is from above, is free, and is the "mother of us all;" but the fullest accomplishment of all will be in the future state.—Henry.

VAST ACCESSION OF CONVERTS.—Ver. 20—23. The Jews, when prosperous in their own land, were exceedingly prone to embrace the idolatries of the surrounding nations: what then could be more improbable, or more contrary to general observation, than that, after they had been crushed and enslaved, by successive conquerors, they should at length become teachers of true religion to their oppressors and to the nations of the earth? Yet this is expressly foretold, with emphatical repetition and variation of circumstances!—The term Jew, or Judean, became the more general national appellation, from the Babylonish captivity: and we have had repeated occasions to remark, that the prophets foretold the conversion of the Gentiles, in language taken from the stated religious worship of their own times. It is, therefore, here evidently foretold, that at least ten times as many Gentiles would be converted to the true religion, as there were Jews, properly so called, among them at the time when the prophecy should begin to be fulfilled.—The astonishing interposition of God in behalf of his people, at Babylon and Susa, &c.; Esther iii.—ix; Dan. ii.—vi; and the translation of the Scriptures into Greek, and the wide dispersion of them in that language, no doubt had considerable effects; but effects far beneath the language here used. For this certainly can mean nothing less, than that [illegible] powerful nations, of all languages, would renounce idolatry, become the worshippers of the God of the Jews, and learn the way of salvation from them, with the grand [illegible] of their religion; and that they would look up to the Jews, as a people [illegible] peculiar marks of favour of God, and press with great earnestness [illegible] This was what the prophets foretold: and accordingly it is a [illegible] undeniable fact, that Greece and Rome, Egypt, and vast multitudes in Assyria, Persia renowned countries both in the east and the west, by the propagation of the gospel, renounced their idols, became the worshippers of JEHOVAH, and took the Jewish Scriptures as his sacred oracles. In process of time, whole nations embraced Christianity: and all the knowledge of the true God, and of true religion, in the world, is derived from Judah, by the Saviour, the glory of Israel and the light of the Gentiles, through the writings and preaching of Jewish prophets, apostles, and evangelists: nor is there the least genuine knowledge of God in the world at this day, which may not be traced back to that source, and that method of communication.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. MERCY TO ISRAEL IN THE PUNISHMENT OF ISRAEL'S FOES.—Ver. 1—8. God's house lies in the midst of an enemy's country, and his church is as a lily among thorns; and therefore God's power and goodness are to be observed in the special preservation of it. The "camp of the saints," being a "little flock" in comparison with the numerous armies of the powers of darkness that are set against it round about, would certainly be swallowed up, if the angels of God did not encamp about it, as they did about Elisha, to deliver it, Rev. xx. 9; Ps. xxxiv. 7. When the times are unusually perilous, when armies are marching and counter-marching, and all bearing ill-will to Zion, then providence will, as it were, double its guards upon the church of God, "because of him that passes by, and because of him that returns," that, whether he return a conqueror or conquered, he may do it no harm. And as none that "pass by" shall hurt them, "so no oppressor shall pass through them any more;" they shall have no enemy within themselves to rule them with rigour, and "to make their lives bitter" to them "with sore bondage," as of old in Egypt. This was fulfilled, when, for some time after the struggles of the Maccabees, Judea was a free and flourishing state: or perhaps when Alexander the Great, struck with an awe of Jaddus the high priest, favoured the Jews, and took them under his protection, at the same time when he wasted the neighbouring countries.—Henry.

THE MEEK AND LOWLY JESUS.—Ver. 9, 10. "It is plain from the Gospels, that the Jews, in Christ's time, understood this prophecy of the Messias. For when our Lord applied it to himself, by entering into Jerusalem upon an ass, it so affected the multitude, that they spread their garments and palm-branches in the way; nay, his disciples took occasion from this sight to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice." covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water.[4]

12 ¶ [q]Turn you to the strong hold, [r]ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee;

13 When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man.

14 And the LORD shall be seen over them, [s]and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord GOD shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south.

15 The LORD of hosts shall defend them; and [t]they shall devour, and subdue [5]with sling-stones; and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they shall be [1]filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar.

16 And the LORD their God [u]shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be as the stones of a crown,[5] lifted up as an ensign upon his land.

17 For [1]how great is his goodness, and how great is his beauty! Corn shall make the young men [*]cheerful, and new wine the maids.

God is to be sought unto, and not idols, 1. The restoration of Judah prophesied, 5.

ASK ye of the LORD rain in the time of the latter rain; so the LORD shall make [*]bright clouds, and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field.

2 For [e]the [†]idols have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie, and have told false dreams; they comfort in vain: therefore they went their way as a flock, they were [‡]troubled,[1] because there was no shepherd.

3 ¶ Mine [k]anger was kindled against the shepherds, and I [§]punished the goats: for the LORD of hosts hath [m]visited his flock the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle.

4 Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle-bow, out of him every oppressor together.

5 And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, [v]because the LORD is with them, [1]and the riders on horses shall be confounded.

6 And [x]I will strengthen the house of Judah, [y]and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; [z]for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: [a]for I am the LORD their God, and will hear them.

7 And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; [c]their heart shall rejoice in the LORD.

8 I will hiss for them, and gather them; [g]for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased.

9 And I will [1]sow them among the people: and they shall [k]remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again.

10 I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria:[2] and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.

11 And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up; and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away.

12 And [t]I will strengthen them in the LORD; and they shall [u]walk up and down in his name,[3] saith the LORD.

The destruction of Jerusalem, 1. The staves, Beauty and Bands, 10.

OPEN thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars.

2 Howl, fir-tree; for the cedar is fallen; because the [*]mighty are spoiled: howl, O ye oaks of Bashan; for the [†]forest of the vintage is come down.

3 ¶ There is a voice of the howling of the shepherds; for their glory is spoiled: a voice of the roaring of young lions; [h]for the pride of Jordan is spoiled.

4 ¶ Thus saith [1]the LORD my God, [k]Feed the flock of the slaughter;

5 Whose possessors slay them, and hold themselves not guilty: and they that sell them say, [o]Blessed be the LORD; for I am rich: and their own shepherds pity them not.

6 For [q]I will no more pity the inhabitants of the land, saith the LORD: but, lo, I will [‡]deliver the men every one into his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of his king; and they shall smite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them.

7 And I will feed the flock of slaughter, [§]even you, O poor of the flock. And I took unto me two staves;[1] the one I called Beauty, and the other I called [1]Bands; and I fed the flock.

expected king was about to come unto her. When he appeared, he would be perfectly just and holy in his character and public administration; yea, he would honour the divine law and justice in the salvation of his people. Though the most honourable and mighty of all the kings and conquerors that ever appeared on earth, he would display none of that magnificence and grandeur, by which they generally are distinguished. On the contrary, humility and lowliness would mark his deportment; poverty and outward meanness his circumstances; and contempt and insult would be his lot on earth. On the single occasion, in which he would at all assume the character of a king; on the memorable occasion, when he would enter Jerusalem amidst the hosannas of the multitude, (who would soon after as loudly demand his crucifixion,) he would for once ride; not on a stately steed gorgeously caparisoned, or in a triumphal car; but on an unbroken untractable creature, an ass's colt! a proper emblem of the ungovernable nature of those over whom he came to reign; but whom his powerful grace renders submissive and obedient, even as his miraculous energy made this animal go on undismayed and guidable, amid the clamorous joy of the surrounding multitudes. Even this ass's colt was not his own, as man, but borrowed; nor was it fitly prepared to be ridden on, but merely with the clothes of the disciples cast loosely upon it. In every respect the divine majesty and dignity of this King were contrasted with the unexampled manner in which he was received into the holy city that was typically the capital of his mighty kingdom. —Scott.

CHAP. X. PROMISE OF SPIRITUAL BLESSING.—Ver. 1. The spiritual blessings promised in the preceding chapter had been shadowed forth under allusions to temporal plenty; and the people were therefore reminded, that they must ask them from God. As rain is essential to the fruitfulness of the earth, they were directed to pray for it in its ordinary seasons; and so the Lord would make bright clouds, either such as are forerunners of rain, or such as are bright by the lightnings which accompany it; and then every field would produce grass, or other vegetables, in plenty.—This may be considered as an exhortation to the people and the preachers of the gospel, to seek the fructifying influences of the Holy Spirit by faith and prayer, without which no means can be successful. Ver. 5—12. These verses are in some things similar to those considered in the former chapter: yet there are expressions that can scarcely be applied to either of the events there mentioned. Under Judas Maccabeus, the Jews became very formidable, and trode down the forces of Antiochus as the mire in the streets; and because the Lord was with them, the enemy could not stand against them. Thus the house of Judah [illegible] their civil and religious privileges, and many of the dispersed Israelites were joined to them. This might also be applied to the success of the apostles and evangelists in their spiritual warfare: but what follows induces me to conclude, that the recovery of the Jews and the whole remnant of the house of Israel from their present dispersion, and future events for which that nation is reserved were predicted; and that it can only be accommodated to any of the past affairs of the Jews or of the church. A time is coming, when the Lord will have mercy on them and hear their prayers; he will again place them in their own land, and be as though he had not cast them off. Then power and gladness will be given to their tribes; and they and their children shall rejoice in God. He will call them together by his word, as the shepherd doth his dispersed flock by his well-known whistle: he will gather them as his redeemed people, and increase them as he had done in former ages. He indeed intended to scatter them as seed through the nations of the earth; alluding to their present dispersed state, in which they are nevertheless marvellously preserved a distinct people. In this dispersion they would at length remember him, and turn again and live before him with their children: then he would bring them from the lands in which they had been in bondage and captivity, as he had of old brought them out of Egypt and Assyria, or Chaldea: and he would replace them in their own land, which would be so replenished, that room would not be found for them. At this approaching time they will experience the same marvellous protection and assistance against the enemies, who oppose their return or settlement, as their fathers had done, when they passed through the Red Sea from their affliction in Egypt, and through Jordan into the promised land; and all the power and pride of their antichristian assailants will be destroyed, like those of Pharaoh and Sennacherib. Thus being strengthened by the Lord, they will walk up and down in his name, trusting and rejoicing in him, and celebrating the praises of his glorious perfections and wonderful works.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. BEAUTY AND BANDS.—Ver. 10. "I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it in sunder," in token of this, that he would be no longer a Shepherd to them; as the lord high steward determines his commission by breaking his white staff, and as Moses breaking the tables of the law put a stop, for the present, to the treaty between God and Israel. The breaking of this staff signified the breaking of God's "covenant" which he had "made with all the people;" the covenant of peculiarity made with all the tribes of "Israel," and all other people, who, by being proselyted to their religion, were incorporated into their nation. The Jewish church was now stripped of all its glory, its crown is profaned, and cast to the ground, and all its honour laid in the dust; for God [illegible] it, and will no more own it for his. The former spake the [illegible] breaking 8 Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; [c]and my soul *loathed them, [d]and their soul also abhorred me.

9 Then said I, I will not feed you: that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let the rest eat every one the flesh of †another.

10 ¶ And I took my staff, even [h]Beauty, and cut it asunder, that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people.

11 And it was broken in that day: and ‡so the poor of the flock that waited upon me [m]knew that it was the word of the LORD.

12 And I said unto them, If §ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. [o]So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.[2]

13 And the LORD said unto me, [p]Cast it unto the potter: [q]a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORD.[3]

14 Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even [t]Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

15 ¶ And the LORD said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd:

16 For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be *cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor †feed that that standeth still; but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

Jerusalem a cup of trembling, 1, and a burdensome stone to her adversaries, 3. The victorious restoring of Judah, 6.

THE burden of the word of the LORD for Israel, saith the LORD, [c]which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and [d]formeth the spirit of man within him.

2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of *trembling unto all the people round about, †when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And in that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone[1] for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together against it.

4 In that day, saith the LORD, I will smite every horse with astonishment, and his rider with madness; and I will open mine eyes upon the house of Judah, and will smite every horse of the people with blindness.

5 And the governors of Judah shall say in their heart, ‡The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the LORD of hosts their God.

6 ¶ In that day will I make the governors of Judah like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf; and they shall devour all the people round about, on the right hand and on the left: and [q]Jerusalem shall be inhabited again in her own place, even in Jerusalem.

7 The LORD also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David, and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, [s]do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day shall the LORD defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is §feeble among them at that day shall be as David;[2] and [x]the house of David shall be as God, [y]as the angel of the LORD before them.

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 ¶ And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and [c]of supplications; and [d]they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and [e]they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

11 In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon[3] in the valley of Megiddon.

12 And the land shall mourn, [f]every family apart; the family of the house of David apart,[4] and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart;

13 The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart; the family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart;

14 All the families that remain, every family apart, and their wives apart.

Jerusalem's purgation from idolatry and false prophecy, 1. The death of Christ, 7.

IN that day there shall be [b]a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for *uncleanness.

2 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the LORD of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered; and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

the covenant between God and them—that defaced their "beauty;" this speaks the ruin of "their state," by breaking the brotherhood between Judah and Israel, by reviving animosities and contention among them, such as were of old between Judah and Israel, the uniting of whom as "one stick in the hand of the Lord," was one of the blessings promised after their return out of captivity, Ezek. xxxvii. 19. But that union shall now be dissolved, they shall be crumbled into parties and factions, exasperated one against another; and their kingdom being thus "divided" shall be "brought to desolation."—Henry.

PROPHETIC PURCHASE OF A FIELD.—Ver. 12—14. This evident prophecy of a transaction recorded in the New Testament, is expressed with much obscurity, as indeed might previously have been expected. It is probable that the prophet performed some symbolical action of this kind, before the rulers and priests, as a type of Christ, and as showing by what means the Jews would seal their own condemnation. He demanding his wages for feeding the flock, if they thought good to give him it; and he received thirty pieces of silver, probably shekels of about the value of half-a-crown or three shillings each. These the Lord directed him to cast unto the potter; disdaining that he or his shepherd should be valued at so paltry a sum: and accordingly the prophet cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord; either the potter came thither for that purpose, or he was at work near the temple. This predicted the bargain of the chief priests with Judas for that very sum to betray Christ into their hands, the traitor's returning the money in horror of conscience, and their determining to purchase with it a potter's field to bury strangers in.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. JERUSALEM A BURDENSOME STONE.—Ver. 3. All "the people of the earth" are here supposed to be "gathered together against it;" some one time, and some another; there has been a succession of enemies, from age to age, making war upon the church; but, though they were all at once in a confederacy against it, and had formed a resolution to "cut off the name of Israel, that it should be no more in remembrance," Ps. lxxxiii. 4, they will find it a task too hard for them. They that are for keeping up and advancing the kingdom of sin in the world, look upon Jerusalem, even the church of God, as the great obstacle to their designs, and they must have it out of the way; but they will find it heavier than they think it is; so that they cannot remove it. God will have a church in the world, in spite of them; it is "built upon a rock," and is as "mount Zion that abides for ever."—Henry.

TIME OF GENERAL PENITENCE.—Ver. 9—14. "God's signal interposition in behalf of Judah and Jerusalem, after their future restoration, having been foretold, the prophet proceeds to foretell their conversion to Christianity." [Bp. Newcombe.] At the time, when the Lord was about to destroy the enemies of the Jews, he intended to prepare them for that favour by "pouring upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem," that is, both upon the rulers and common people, "the Spirit of grace and supplications." The Holy Spirit is infinitely gracious and merciful; he is most freely bestowed upon sinners; and he is the author of all grace or holiness. He is also the Spirit of supplications; he shows them their ignorance, indigence, guilt, pollution, misery, and danger; he leads them to understand and believe the truths and promises of Scripture; and he excites hope and spiritual desires, and thus inwardly constrains them to pour out their hearts in earnest prayer.—Then, (says the speaker, JEHOVAH, who alone can give the Holy Spirit,) "they shall look on me, whom they have pierced." John xix. 37. The ancestors of that generation of Jews caused Christ to be nailed to the cross, and pierced by the soldier's spear; for they employed the Romans to execute the sentence which they had denounced, exclaiming, "his blood be on us, and on our children!" And their posterity have ever since been consenting to this deed by their obstinate unbelief. But at the predicted period, they will know who this crucified Jesus was; and then they shall by faith look to him and mourn over him, as pierced and slain "by them:" this reflection will melt their hearts into extreme sorrow and compunction; they will repent of that national sin, and of all their personal transgressions, as men are used bitterly to lament the death of an only or a first-born son; for they will perceive that they had wickedly slain the hope and glory of their nation. This will be a general mourning of the whole people, like that, which was occasioned by the death of Josiah, who was slain in the valley of Megiddon. All the people shall mourn with godly sorrow, which will not only be expressed in public, but in their families and in private; and even husbands and wives will separately in retirement, give vent to their grief, and humble themselves before God for all their sins. And as their rulers, priests, scribes, and people, had concurred in the crucifixion of Christ; so all orders of men will concur in this repentance. The family of David the king, that of Nathan the most eminent prophet in David's reign, that of Levi, or the priests and ministers of religion, and that of Shimei, who perhaps was some noted scribe, might be mentioned, as representing the different orders of men among them.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. FALSE PROPHETS.—Ver. 4—6. Among those who will disavow their being prophets, some will be found "with wounds in their hands;" which may refer to marks imprinted in their hands, as a badge of their being devoted to some idol: to the wounds, that men have sometimes given themselves by voluntary austerities; or to some punishment that had been inflicted on them for their impostures. These they ascribe to

The destroyers of Jerusalem destroyed, 1. The coming of Christ, and the graces of his kingdom, 4.

BEHOLD, the day of the LORD cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.

2 For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; [e]and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.[1]

3 ¶ Then shall the LORD go forth, [g]and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

4 And [i]his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

5 And ye shall flee to the valley of *the mountains; †for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yea, ye shall flee, like as [o]ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah: [p]and the LORD my God shall come, [q]and all the saints with thee.

7 But [l]it shall be one day which shall be known to the LORD, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening-time it shall be light.

8 And it shall be in that day, that [x]living waters[2] shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the *former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be.

9 And the LORD shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one LORD, [a]and his name one.

12 ¶ And this shall be the plague wherewith the LORD will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem: [k]Their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that [l]a great tumult from the LORD shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.

14 [m]And [l]Judah also shall fight *at Jerusalem: and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.

15 And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

16 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations, which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.[4] other causes, as having been the effect of accident, or correction, when at home with their friends. As a most remarkable prophecy of Christ follows in the next verse, some expositors explain this also of him, and the wounds that he received in his hands when crucified. The Jews were professedly the friends of the promised Messiah, and he had acted in the most friendly manner to the nation; but they put him to death by a blind and malevolent perversion of the law enacted against deceivers and false prophets.

CHRIST'S SUFFERINGS.—Ver. 7. The sword of divine justice had lain asleep, as it were, during the long season of God's forbearance, but he now commanded it to awake, in order to execute vengeance upon his Shepherd, whom he had appointed to feed his flock; it was commissioned to awake against "the man," one in human nature, the Redeemer now considered as incarnate: yet this was no ordinary man, much less an enemy, but "the fellow," the companion, equal, compeer of the Lord of hosts, the Son of the Father, "the Word that was with God, and was God." It was "to smite this Shepherd" without sparing him: which may refer to the whole of Christ's sufferings, in which men and evil spirits were no more than the executioners of that wrath of God, that he suffered for our sins: yet it seems especially to relate to his agonies in the garden and his exclamation on the cross, when he endured unspeakable anguish from the immediate hand of the Father, who "was pleased to bruise him, and to put him to grief," till divine justice was fully satisfied. When the Shepherd should thus be smitten for the sins of the flock, the sheep would be scattered, as the disciples were when Christ was apprehended, Matt. xxvi. 31, 56, and then the Lord would "turn his hand upon the little ones;" to take care of the helpless company that would be exposed like little children to the rage of their persecutors, when their Lord was taken from them.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. The ROMAN INVASION.—Ver. 1—3. "The Romans, being lords of the known world, had the strength of all nations united in their forces." [Lowth.]—Half. "The Hebrew word may be rendered a portion."—"The Romans spared the young and useful part of the Jews. However, these were either condemned to the mines in Egypt, or exposed to the sword and to the wild beasts in the provincial theatres, or sold for slaves.—The forty thousand who were permitted to go where they pleased, were Idumeans." [Bp. Newcombe.] All these were "cut off from the city."—Some expositors, on this and other grounds, suppose that all the predictions of this chapter relate to events yet future; but probably they begin with the catastrophe of Jerusalem's destruction by the Romans, and so gradually extend to those events that shall hereafter take place in respect of the Jews, the church of Christ, and their enemies. The time when the Romans marched their armies, composed of many nations, to besiege Jerusalem, was the day of the Lord Jesus, on which he came to "destroy those that would not have him to reign over them." When the Romans had taken the city, all the outrages were committed, and the miseries endured, which are here predicted. A large proportion of the inhabitants were destroyed, or taken captives, and sold for slaves, &c., and multitudes were driven away, to be pursued by various perils and miseries; numbers, having been converted to Christianity, became citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, and thus were "not cut off from the city of God." But it is probable that the remnant of Jews, who survived this almost exterminating destruction, and their descendants, who have for so many centuries been preserved a distinct people, in order to their future restoration, are intended.

A PECULIAR DAY.—Ver. 6—9. In "that day," under the christian dispensation, for a long season, the light would neither be clear nor dark: it would be greatly obscured by ignorance, heresy superstition, and idolatry; yet not wholly extinguished: and the state of the church would be much deformed by sin and calamities; yet some holiness and consolation would be found. This period could neither be called a clear, bright day, cheered and illumined by the shining of a summer's sun; nor would it be dark, as if the sun were set, or totally eclipsed: but it would contain a great mixture of truth and error, of holiness and sin, of happiness and misery. Yet it would form one day, and never be interrupted by a night of total darkness. It would also be known unto the Lord, as to the degree of its light, and the term of its continuance; and he would watch over, and take care of his cause and people all the time of it. But his people would hardly know whether to call it day or night, or a compound of both: yet at length, towards the evening of the world, the Sun of righteousness would break forth, and shine with unclouded splendour, dispelling the gloom of ignorance, heresy, idolatry, and superstition; and illuminating the church and the earth with knowledge, righteousness, peace and consolation.

PUNISHMENT OF SPIRITUAL INDIFFERENCE.—Ver. 16—19. The feast of tabernacles was typical of Christ's dwelling in our nature as in a tabernacle; and of the Christian's contempt of the world, and joy in the Lord, as a stranger and pilgrim on earth. To keep the feast of tabernacles, therefore, seems to mean, that the persons intended would be converted to Christ, and join with pleasure in his ordinances, continually and with perseverance. The remnant of the nations that had just before been fighting against Jerusalem, or the church; the subjects of the eastern and western antichrists, and the Gentiles, will in great numbers be converted to pure Christianity, and become the spiritual worshippers and obedient servants of the Lord. But such as persist in idolatry and opposition to true religion, will be visited with drought and famine; which probably

THE BOOK OF MALACHI.

THE name of this prophet signifies, My angel, or My messenger; and is the same word that he used concerning the forerunner of Christ, and nearly the same that he used about Christ himself (iii. 1). Perhaps he was called Malachi with reference to these predictions, as well as to his prophetical office; and probably he had another name. He seems to have been the last in order of the prophets whose writings were transmitted to posterity; and to have been contemporary with Nehemiah, or to have lived after his time. As this prophet particularly foretold the ministry of John Baptist, and the speedy coming of Christ, he is very frequently quoted or referred to in the New Testament (comp. iii. 1 with Matt. xi. 10; Mark i. 2; Luke vii. 27; and iv. 5, 6 with Matt. xvii. 10-12; Mark ix. 11, 12; Luke i. 16, 17).

Malachi complaineth of Israel's unkindness, 1, irreligion, 6, and profaneness, 12.

THE burden of the word of the LORD to Israel, [*]by Malachi.

2 I have loved you, saith the LORD. Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the LORD: [d]yet I loved Jacob,[1]

3 And I [e]hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness.

4 Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the LORD of hosts, [f]They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and, [f]The people against whom the LORD hath indignation for ever.

5 And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, [n]The LORD will be magnified [†]from the border of Israel.

6 ¶ A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master: if then I be a father, where is mine honour? [r]and if I be a master, where is my fear? saith the LORD of hosts unto you, O priests, that despise my name. And ye say, Wherein have we despised thy name?

7 [‡]Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, The table of the LORD is contemptible.[2]

8 And if ye offer the blind [§]for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and sick, is it not evil? offer it now unto thy governor;[3] will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the LORD of hosts.

9 And now, I pray [‖]you, []beseech God that he will be gracious unto us: this hath been []by your means: will he regard your persons? saith the LORD of hosts.

10 Who is there even among you that would shut the doors for nought? neither do ye kindle fire on mine altar for nought. [d]I have no pleasure in you, saith the LORD of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand.

11 For from the rising of the sun, even unto the going down of the same, [f]my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place [h]incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 ¶ But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, [k]The table of the LORD is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat, is contemptible.

13 Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! [†]and ye have snuffed at it, saith the LORD of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: [n]should I accept this of your hand? saith the LORD.

14 ¶ But cursed be the deceiver,[4] [‡]which hath in his flock a male, and voweth, and sacrificeth unto the LORD a corrupt thing: [q]for I am a great King, saith the LORD of hosts, and [r]my name is dreadful among the heathen.

implies both temporal and spiritual judgments. And, as Egypt seldom has any rain, and another method must be taken to visit her with famine; so no situation or circumstances shall preserve any people from these judgments, who refuse to worship the Lord alone, because of their attachment to old superstitions and idolatries: they must therefore either be converted or destroyed.—"The Jews have a tradition, that the defeat of Gog and Magog, which seems to be the same discomfiture which is here described, shall fall out on the feast of tabernacles; or as others say, the seven months' cleansing of the land shall be finished at that time." "Holiness to the Lord" shall be written on the harness of their chariot-horses, as great men have sometimes their coat of arms with their motto painted on their coaches; every gentleman shall take the high priest's motto for his, and glory in it, and make it a memento to himself not to do any thing unworthy of it. Travellers shall have it on their "bridles" with which they guide their horses, as those who desire always to be put in mind of it, by having it continually before them, and to guide themselves in all their motions by this rule. "The bells of the horses," which are designed to quicken them in their journey, and to give notice of their approach, shall have "Holiness to the Lord" upon them, to signify that this is that which we ought to be "influenced" by ourselves, and "make profession" of to others, wherever we go. 2. The "furniture of their houses," too, shall be consecrated to God, to be employed in his service. The furniture of the "priests' houses," or apartments adjoining to the "house of the Lord." The common drinking-cups they used shall be "like the bowls before the altar," that were used either to receive the blood of the sacrifices, or to present the wine and oil in, which were for the "drink-offerings."—Henry.

CHAP. I. INSINCERE PROFESSION.—Ver. 6—8. It was allowed by all, that a son ought to honour the person, and respect the reputation and authority, of his father. A servant also was used to fear the displeasure, and reverence the will and commands, of his master; and men would condemn him that neglected the duty of this relation. But God had always been a father to Israel, not only as the author and preserver of their natural lives, or their benefactor in temporal things; but in respect of their religious advantages and the typical adoption that belonged to them: yet where were the honour, reverence, submission, and regard to his will and glory, which that relation required? They also called him their Lord and Master; but they neither aimed to please, nor feared to offend him; they neither respected his authority nor obeyed his commands.—This was especially the case with the priests.

DIFFUSION OF THE GOSPEL AMONG THE GENTILES.—Ver. 9—11. The Jews seem to have been at this time under divine rebukes; and the priests were appointed to burn incense and make intercession in behalf of the nation. Let them, therefore, beseech the Lord to be gracious to Israel, according to the duty of their office: but as these judgments came upon the nation for their sins, or those into which they led the people, could they expect, that God would regard their persons, or answer their prayers? For they had no love to the Lord or his service, but merely to the emoluments of the sacerdotal office; so that none of them would open the doors of the temple, or keep up the fire on the altar, or do any thing that they could help, except some extra emolument were annexed to it. God had provided sufficiently for their maintenance; but their love of filthy lucre was insatiable, and he had no pleasure in such mercenary services. He would therefore soon terminate that dispensation, and the priesthood which they so profaned, and deprive the nation of their idolized and abused privileges; but he would cause his name to be adored among the Gentiles all over the earth; and in every place their spiritual worship should ascend as incense and a pure offering into his presence, through the intercession of the great high priest whom he had appointed. So that whilst the Jews, especially the priests, had despised, and would more despise, his name, it should be rendered great and honoured among the heathen, in all parts of the earth. "Surely the doors shall be closed against you, neither shall ye kindle the fire of my altar in vain." [Bp. Newcombe.] Thus the verse may be considered as a prophecy of the abolition of the Levitical priesthood; and an introduction to a prediction concerning the conversion of the nations, and the spiritual priesthood, in the subsequent verse. But then the text must be altered on slender authority, and without necessity; for our version gives an important and instructive view of the subject.—"We have here a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles; and, as usual, under Jewish images." [Bp. Newcombe.] None of the Jews so much profaned that great name of the Lord, as the priests did, who ought to have most hallowed it. They treated his sacrifices and oblations as polluted, and all the gains that regularly accrued from his service contemptible. Perhaps they thought any thing was good

CHAP. II.

He reproveth the priests for neglecting their covenant, 1; and the people for idolatry, 11; adultery, 14; and infidelity, 17.

AND now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, [d]to give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, [e]and I will curse your blessings: yea, [f]I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, I will [*]corrupt your seed, and [†]spread dung upon your faces,[1] even the dung of your solemn feasts; and one shall [‡]take you away with it.

4 And [g]ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, [h]that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

5 My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: [i]he walked with me in peace and equity, [k]and did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is [l]the messenger of the LORD of hosts.

8 But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to [§]stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the LORD of hosts:

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but [‖]have been partial in the law.

10 Have we not [a]all one father?[2] [b]hath not one God created us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, [c]by profaning the covenant of our fathers?

11 ¶ Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem: for Judah hath [d]profaned the holiness of the LORD which [*]he loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god.

12 The LORD will [b]cut off the man that doeth this, [†]the master and the scholar, out of the tabernacles of Jacob, [‖]and him that offereth an offering unto the LORD of hosts.

13 ¶ And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the LORD with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, or receiveth it with good-will at your hand.

14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because [e]the LORD hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously: yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

15 And did not he make one? Yet had he the [‡]residue of [‖]the Spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a [§]godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal [‖]treacherously against the wife of his youth.

16 For the LORD, the God of Israel, saith [*]that he hateth [†]putting away:[3] for one [‡]covereth violence with his garment, saith the LORD of hosts; therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously.

17 ¶ Ye have [a]wearied the LORD with your words: yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him? When ye say, Every one that doeth evil is good in the sight of the LORD, and he delighteth in them; or, [d]Where is the God of judgment?

CHAP. III.

Of the messenger, majesty, and grace of Christ, 1. Of the rebellion, 7; sacrilege, 8; and infidelity of the people, 13.

BEHOLD, [a]I will send my messenger, [b]and he shall prepare the way before me: [c]and the LORD, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, [d]even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the LORD of hosts.

2 But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap:

3 And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi,[1] and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the LORD an offering in righteousness.

4 Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the LORD, as in the days of old, and as in [*]former years.

5 And [n]I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be [o]a swift witness against the sorcerers and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that [†]oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and [r]fear not me, saith the LORD of hosts.

6 For I am the LORD, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

7 ¶ Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. [r]Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return?

8 ¶ Will a man rob God? yet ye have enough to set upon the table of shewbread; and scorned to eat that, which was removed from it, as if it had been polluted: they complained and showed by their very looks, that the services to which they were continually called were intolerably wearisome, and they snuffed with contempt at the portion of the sacrifies allotted to them by the law. They therefore allowed the people to bring blemished sacrifices; who, being also weary of these expensive institutions, readily brought such as God could not consistently accept at their hands. Indeed, if any were in reality so poor, that they could not procure the appointed sacrifices for the payment of their vows, they might be borne with: but that man would surely incur the awful curse of God, who attempted to impose on him by vain pretences, when he had a proper sacrifice, and yet paid his vow with one that was corrupt and worthless.—Even the heathens had heard so much of the power and majesty of Israel's King, that they trembled at his name, and could Israelites expect to despise it with impunity?—Animals, which must not be sacrificed in payment of a vow, might be presented as a free-will offering.—Scott.

CHAP. II. DUTY OF THE PRIESTHOOD.—Ver. 4—9. The Lord made a covenant with the tribe of Levi and the family of Aaron about the priesthood, as well as one with the nation of Israel, about the land of Canaan, &c.; and afterwards one with David about the kingdom. And the Levites would know at length that God had sent these orders, that this covenant might be confirmed to them by means of their repentance and reformation. The whole tribe of Levi and family of Aaron was here spoken of as a single person, with whom the covenant of life and peace had been made: which would be enjoyed in the favour of God and the comfort of his service. This appointment was a gracious recompense of their piety and reverential fear of God; for when this trust was committed to them, many of them were well acquainted with the law given by Moses, and ready to speak of it to the people; their worship and conversation were sincere and faithful, and free from iniquity or hypocrisy; they walked before God, as at peace with him, and as following after equity and peace with men; and they were instrumental in converting numbers from their sins to the worship and service of God. They were not mere sacrifices, as their posterity had become: but they were sensible that the priest ought ever to be ready to speak upon any part of sacred knowledge, and, as the messenger of God, to instruct the people from his word. But their posterity had departed from this good way.—Scott.

MARRIAGE IN THE LORD.—Ver. 15. The raising up of a "godly seed," which shall be "accounted to the Lord for a generation," is one great end of the institution of marriage; but that is a good reason why the "marriage-bed" should be kept "undefiled," and the "marriage-bond" inviolable. Husbands and wives must "therefore" live in the fear of God, that their seed may be a "godly seed;" else were they "unclean," but "now they are holy, as children of the covenant," the marriage-covenant, which was a type of the covenant of grace, and the conjugal union, when thus preserved entire, of the mystical union between Christ and his church, in which he seeks and secures to himself a "godly seed."

IMPIETY.—Ver. 17. "Ye have wearied the Lord with your words." They thought to invade the convictions of the world, and to justify themselves by cavilling with God's proceedings; but their defence was their offence, and their vindication of themselves was the aggravation of their crime; they affronted the Lord with their words, and repeated them so often, and persisted so long in their contradictions, that they even "wearied him," see Isa. vii. 13. They made him weary of doing them good as he had done, and stopped the current of his favours; or, they represented him as weary of governing the world, and willing to quit it, and lay aside the care of it. Note, It is a wearisome thing, even to God himself, to hear people insist upon their own justification in their corrupt and wicked practices, and to plead their atheistical principles in vindication of them. But as if God by his prophet had done them wrong, see how impudently they ask, "Wherein have we wearied him?" What are those vexatious words whereby we have wearied him? Note, Sinful words are more offensive to the God of heaven than they are commonly thought to be.—Henry.

CHAP. III. CHRIST'S FORERUNNER.—Ver. 1. Now here we have a prophecy of the appearing of his forerunner John the Baptist, which the prophet Isaiah had foretold, chap. xl. iii., as the "preparing" of the "way of the Lord," to which this here seems to have a reference, for the words of the later prophets confirmed those of the former; "Behold, I will send my messenger," or, "I do send him," or, "I am sending" him. "I am determined to send him, he will now shortly come, and will not come 'unsent,' though to a careless generation he comes 'unsent for.'" Observe, 1. He is "God's messenger;" that is his office; he is "Malachi," (so the word is,) the same with the name of this prophet; he is "my angel, my ambassador." John Baptist had his commission "from heaven, and not of men." All held John Baptist for a prophet, for he was God's messenger, as the prophets were, and came on the same errand to the world that they were sent upon—to call men to repentance and reformation. 2. He is "Christ's harbinger." He shall "prepare the way before me," by calling men to those duties which qualify them to receive the comforts of the Messiah and his coming.—Henry.

9 Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.

10 Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, [f]and prove me now herewith, saith the LORD of hosts, if I will not [g]open you the windows of heaven, and [h]pour you out a blessing, [i]that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

13 ¶ Your [n]words have been stout against me, saith the LORD: yet ye say, What have we spoken so much against thee?

14 Ye have said, [p]It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his [q]ordinance, and that we have walked [r]mournfully before the LORD of hosts?

15 And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are [s]set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered.

16 ¶ Then they [u]that feared the LORD spake often one to another:[x] and the LORD hearkened, and heard it; and [y]a book of remembrance[z] was written before him for them that feared the LORD, and that thought upon his name.

17 And [a]they shall be mine, saith the LORD of hosts, in that day when I make up my [b]jewels;[c] [d]and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

damnation and punishment of the Jewish nation. He would come among them as a witness to testify that their works were evil; and thus he would "speedily" convict the sorcerers, and other notorious criminals, of which the bulk of the nation at that time principally consisted, and then he would bring them to condign punishment. The prevalence of these and similar crimes indeed, caused the Jews to reject Christ and his holy gospel, and thus brought on the ruin of the nation.—JEHOVAH being immutable in his nature and purposes, would not consume the nation, till the Messiah was come: but then his immutable justice, holiness, and truth required him to punish them for their enormous wickedness. The people might indeed imagine, that in the days of the Messiah, the Lord would deal with them more leniently; as if he had not continued the same holy and just God, as when he gave the law; (thus many nominal Christians seem to suppose, that God, under the gospel, is too merciful to punish sinners; or at least that he makes "far more allowances for sin" than formerly:) but, as his immutable perfection had hitherto led him, amidst all the provocations of Israel, to perform his promises to their fathers; so the same immutable perfection would still induce him, when the Messiah was come, to magnify his law, to glorify his justice, and to honour his truth and holiness, by the condign punishment of all the impenitent and unbelieving.—Scott.

A FULL BLESSING.—Ver. 10. Let them then trust God to provide for them and their comfort; "Let God be first served, and then 'prove me herewith, saith the Lord of hosts,' whether I will not 'open the windows of heaven.'" They said, "Let God give us our plenty again, as formerly, and try us whether we will not then bring him his tithes and offerings as we did formerly." "No," says God, "do you first bring in all your tithes as they become due, and all the arrears of what is past, and try me, whether I will not then restore you your plenty." Note, Those that will deal with God, must "deal upon trust;" and we may all venture to do so, for, though many have been losers "for him," never any were losers "by him," in the end. It is fit that we should "venture first," for his reward is "with him," but his work is "before him;" we must first do the work which is "our part," and then "try him," and trust him for the reward.—Henry.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP AND PRAYER.—Ver. 13—18. Many bold infidels and impious persons were found among the Jews, who spake stout words against God, and justified them. They thought all their time and expense in his service lost: they attended his ordinances with many expressions of self-denial and humiliation, but they derived no profit from them; and they concluded, that those haughty rebels, who cast off all religion, and tempted God by their presumptuous wickedness, were the more prosperous and happy persons. There was, however, also a remnant of humble pious believers, who met together from time to time, that they might confer on religious subjects, animate one another to their duty, and inquire what might be done to check the progress of impiety. Of these and their pious designs and discourses, the Lord took special notice, and, as it were, kept a register. And he would surely preserve them as his portion and peculiar treasure; and no more suffer one of them to be lost, than a kind father would destroy his dutiful and obedient son among his inveterate enemies. So that the people, in the event seeing this, would retract their erroneus judgments, in supposing that the wicked are happy and the righteous miserable: for they would discern a manifest difference in the condition of those that did, and those who did not, serve God. The connection of this passage relates to the times of Christ, and the fate of the believing and unbelieving Jews: but it will be fulfilled in a far more striking manner at the day of judgment.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.—To you that fear my name "shall the Sun of righteousness arise, with healing in his wings." The day that comes, as it will be a stormy day to the wicked, a day in which God will rain upon them "fire and brimstone, and a horrible tempest," as he did on Sodom, Ps. xi. 6, a "day of clouds and thick darkness," Amos v. 18, 20, so it will be a fair and bright day to those who fear God, and reviving as the rising sun is to the earth; and particular notice is taken of the rising of the sun upon Zoar, when that was mercifully distinguished from the cities of the plain, whom the fire "consumed," see Gen. xix. 23. So, to you that fear God is comfort spoken; when the hearts of others "fail for fear," let them "lift up their heads for joy," for "their redemption draws nigh," Luke xxi. 28. But by the "Sun of righteousness" here we are certainly to understand Jesus Christ, who would undertake to secure the believing remnant, in the day of the general destruction of the Jews, from falling with the rest, and to comfort them in that day of distress and perplexity with his consolations; he directed them that were in Judea to "flee to the mountains," Matt. xxiv. 16, and they did so, and were all safe and easy in Pella. But it is to be applied more generally, 1. To the coming of Christ in the flesh, to seek and save them that were lost; then the "Sun of Righteousness" arose upon this dark world. Christ is the "Light of the world," the true Light, the "great Light" that makes day, and rules the day, John viii. 12, as the sun; he is the "Light of men," John i. 4, is to men's souls as the sun is to the visible world, which without the sun would be a dungeon; so would mankind be darkness itself without the "light of the glory of God" shining "in the face of Christ." Christ is the sun that has life in himself, and is the Fountain of light, Ps. xix. 4—6, he is the "Sun of righteousness," for he is himself a righteous Saviour; "righteousness" is both the light and the heat of this Sun, the word of his righteousness is so, it guides, instructs, and quickens; so is the "everlasting righteousness" he has brought in; he is "made of God to us Righteousness," he is the "Lord our Righteousness," and therefore is fitly called "the Sun of Righteousness;" through him we are justified and sanctified, and so are brought to "see light." The Sun of Righteousness, in the fulness of time, "arose" upon the world, and with him "light came into the world," John iii. xix, a "great light," Matt. iv. 16. In him the "dayspring from on high visited us," to give light to them that sit in darkness, Luke i. 78, 79. Righteousness sometimes signifies "mercy" or "benignity," and it was in Christ that the "tender mercy of our God" visited us. 2. It is applicable to the graces and comforts of the Holy Spirit, brought into the souls of men. Grotius understands it of Christ's giving the Spirit to those that are his, to shine in their hearts, and to be a "Comforter" to them, a "Sun" and a "shield." Those that are possessed and governed by a holy "fear of God," and a dread of his majesty, shall have his "love" also "shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost;" and then the sun may be said to "arise" there, and to bring both a "delightful day" and a "fruitful spring" along with it. 3. Christ's second coming will be a glorious and welcome sun-rising to all that "fear his name;" it will be that "morning" of the resurrection, in which the "upright" shall have "dominion," Ps. xlix. 14. That day which to the wicked will "burn as an oven," will to the righteous be bright as the morning; and it is what they wait for, "more than they that wait for the morning."—Henry.

LAST WORDS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.—Ver. 4—6. "Because the time was come that the Jews should be destitute of prophets till the time of Christ, that they might with more fervent mind desire his coming; the prophet exhorteth them to exercise themselves diligently in studying the law of Moses in the mean season, whereby they might continue in the true religion, and also be armed against all temptations."—These verses intimate that the Jews were to expect no more prophets till the forerunner of Christ appeared among them. They were therefore to attend to the law of Moses, and wait the Messiah's coming by the light of that dispensation. At length Elijah would come, (that is, John Baptist,) to introduce that glorious and terrible day of Christ. And his ministry would tend to turn the hearts of the fathers "with" the children to the Lord, to reconcile their discordant parties, by directing them all to Christ; or restore the degenerate children to the temper of their pious forefathers, that they might be owned as their posterity. And except this change took place, the Lord would come and smite the land with a curse. With this awful sentence the Old Testament concludes.—"He showeth, wherein John Baptist's office should stand; in the turning of men to God, and joining of the father and children in one unity of faith; so that the father shall turn to the religion of his son that is converted to Christ, and the son shall embrace the faith of the true fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."—John Baptist, in many things, resembled Elijah, the intrepid, self-denying, and zealous reformer of Israel, in the day of Ahab.—He came "in the spirit and power of Elijah," who was considered as the chief of the prophets, after Moses.—"The utter destruction of the Jewish nation is here threatened, upon their rejecting the preaching of John Baptist, and refusing to hearken to his testimony concerning the Messias." [Lowth.]—Scott.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO # ST MATTHEW.

LITTLE is known concerning the writer of this Gospel, except what he has recorded of himself (Notes, ix. 9-13; x. 3). He is generally supposed to have written his history about eight years after our Lord's ascension, and before any other part of the New Testament was extant. It is certain that it was published at a very early period. Many have contended that this Gospel was written in Hebrew, and that we have only a translation of it in Greek. But learned men have satisfactorily shewn that this is a mistake, and that the apostle wrote his Gospel in Greek, as we now have it; though they seem willing to allow that he also gave a Hebrew or Syriac version of it for the use of his countrymen. The reader, who wishes to examine the subject, will find it fully discussed in Dr Whitby's Preface.

CHAP. I.

The genealogy of Christ, 1; his conception and birth, 18; his name, 21, 23.

THE book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.[1]

2 [a]Abraham begat Isaac; and [b]Isaac begat Jacob; [c]and Jacob begat Judas and his brethren;

3 And [d]Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar; [e]and Phares begat Esrom, and Esrom begat [f]Aram;

4 And Aram begat [g]Aminadab, and Aminadab begat [h]Naasson; and Naasson begat Salmon;

5 And [i]Salmon begat Booz of Rachab; and [j]Booz begat Obed of Ruth; and [k]Obed begat Jesse;

6 And [l]Jesse begat David the king; and David the king begat [m]Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias;

7 And Solomon begat [n]Roboam; and Roboam begat [o]Abia; and Abia begat [p]Aza;

8 And Aza begat [q]Josaphat; and Josaphat begat [r]Joram; and Joram begat [s]Ozias;

9 And Ozias begat [t]Joatham; and Joatham begat [u]Achaz; and Achaz begat [v]Ezekias;

10 And Ezekias begat [x]Manasses; and Manasses begat [y]Amon; and Amon begat [z]Josias;

11 And [*]Josias begat [a]Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon:

12 And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel; [b]and Salathiel begat Zorobabel;

13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud; and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

14 And Azor begat Sadoc; and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

15 And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

16 And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary,[2] of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

18 ¶ Now [c]the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child [d]of the Holy Ghost.

19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.[3]

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, [e]the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, [f]Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife:[4] for [g]that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

21 And she shall bring forth a son, and [h]thou shalt call his name JESUS: [i]for he shall save his people from their sins.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

23 Behold, [j]a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall [k]call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, [l]God with us.

24 Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife;

25 And knew her not till [m]she had brought forth her first-born son:[5] [n]and he called his name JESUS.

CHAP. II.

The wise men, coming to Christ, worship him, 1. Joseph fleeth into Egypt, 14.

NOW when Jesus was born in [a]Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

2 Saying, Where is he that is [b]born King of the Jews? for we have seen [c]his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

CHAP. I. GENEALOGY OF JESUS.—Ver. 2–17. Various difficulties have been started in respect of this genealogy; but a few general remarks may suffice to show them to be comparatively of small consequence. It is evident that the genealogy of Joseph, and not of Mary, is given in these verses. That of Mary is traced back to Adam by St. Luke, as will be shown hereafter. Joseph was supposed by the Jews to be the father of Jesus, and he was his father-in-law: it was therefore proper that his descent from David should be ascertained. Probably this genealogy was copied from the public registers of the nation, which were well known; and this may account for some omissions and variations, which are found in it on comparing it with the history of the Old Testament. The other children of Abraham are not mentioned with Isaac, nor is Esau, who was the twin-brother of Jacob, and elder than he; for their descendants were not interested in the covenants of promise. But the children of Judah are mentioned, as their posterity constituted the chosen people of God; and Zara, twin-brother of Phares, is inserted, because part of the tribe of Judah descended from him. The names of four women are found in it, being all remarkable characters: Thamar of whom, by incest with her father-in-law, the greatest part of the tribe of Judah was descended. Rachab, or Rahab, who seems to have been the same that had been a harlot, and an inhabitant of Jericho, but through faith was preserved from the destruction of that city; for no other woman of that name is mentioned in Scripture. Ruth, the Moabitess; and Bathsheba, who had been the wife of Uriah, with whom David had committed adultery. This might intimate that Christ was made in the likeness of sinful flesh, and came to save the Gentiles and the vilest of sinners. Three kings, the immediate descendants of Athalia, by Joram, the son of Jehoshaphat, viz., Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah, are passed over without notice. Perhaps it was found so in the genealogies, and they that compiled them, aiming to reduce the number of genealogies from David to the captivity to fourteen, as well as that from Abraham to David, though these descendants of that wicked woman, by an unhallowed fatal marriage, might most properly be omitted. But some think that Matthew was directed to leave them out for similar reasons.—In some manuscripts it is found, "Josiah begat Jehoiakim, and Jehoiakim Jeconias:" and it is certain that Jeconias was grandson to Josiah, and the father or grandfather of Salathiel; nor does it appear that he had any brethren, for his uncle Zedekiah succeeded him, when he was carried to Babylon.—From Jeconiah, who was carried captive, to Joseph the husband of Mary, were also fourteen generations: and at that time the illustrious house of David was so reduced, that its rights, in the line of Solomon, centered in a poor carpenter; at least he was that descendant whom the Lord chose to stand in the place of a legal father to the promised [illegible] typified by Jesse's rod, viz. Him, might spring up "as a tender plant out of a dry ground."—The marginal references contain nearly all the information which can be obtained on the subject of this geneology.—It is probable that some names are omitted between Salmon and David. And either the marginal edition of Jakim, or Jehoiakim, must be admitted, or Jechonias, in the twelfth verse, must be considered as the son of Jechonias mentioned in the eleventh: for otherwise the fourteen generations are not completed.—"Perhaps interpreters might save themselves the trouble of giving a reason of many things contained in this catalogue, by saying, St. Matthew here recites it as he found it in the authentic copies of the Jews, who doubtless had preserved some known and approved genealogy of their descent from Abraham, the father of their nation, in whom they so much gloried, and from whose loins they expected the promised Messiah." [Whitby.]—Scott.

JESUS—HIS NAME.—"She shall bring forth a Son;" what he shall be is intimated, 1. In the name that should be given to her Son; "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, a Saviour." Jesus is the same name with Joshua, the termination only being changed, for the sake of conforming it to the Greek. Joshua is called Jesus, (Acts vii. 45; Heb. iv. 8.) from the Seventy. There were two of that name under the Old Testament, who were both illustrious types of Christ; Joshua, who was Israel's Captain at their first settlement in Canaan; and Joshua, who was their high priest at their second settlement after the captivity, Zech. vi. 11, 12. Christ is our Joshua; both the "Captain of our Salvation," and the "High Priest of our profession," and in both our Saviour;—a Joshua who comes in the stead of Moses, and does that for us which "the law could not do, in that it was weak." Joshua had been called Hoshea, but Moses prefixed the first syllable of the Jehovah, and so made it Jehoshua, Numb. xiii. 16, to intimate that the Messiah, who was to bear that name, should be Jehovah; he is therefore "able to save to the uttermost," neither is there "salvation in any other." 2. In the reason of that name; "For he shall save his people from their sins;" not the nation of the Jews only, (he came to "his own," and they "received him not,") but all who were given him by "the Father's choice," and all who have given themselves to him by "their own." He is a King who "protects" his subjects, and, as the Judges of Israel of old, "works salvation" for them. Note, Those whom Christ saves, he saves "from their sins;" from the guilt of sin by the "merit of his death," from the dominion of sin, by the "Spirit of his grace." In saving them from sin, he saves them from wrath and the curse, and all misery here and hereafter.—Henry.

CHAP. II. THE WISE MEN.—Ver. 1. This we are sure of, 1. That they were Gentiles, and not belonging to the commonwealth of Israel. The Jews regarded not Christ; but 3 ¶ When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

4 And when he had gathered all [l]the chief priests[1] and [k]scribes[2] of the people together, [l]he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, [m]In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written by the prophet,

6 And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah: for out of thee shall come [o]a Governor, that shall *rule my people Israel.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, [q]Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.

9 ¶ When they had heard the king, they departed: and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

10 When they saw the star, [t]they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

11 ¶ And when they were come into the house, [u]they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him:[3] and when they had opened their treasures, they [t]presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.

12 And being [s]warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

13 And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, [d]Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there [e]until I bring thee word: [f]for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him.

14 When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt:

15 And was there [h]until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my son.

16 ¶ Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, [n]and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet,[4] saying,

18 In [q]Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, [q]Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

19 ¶ But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, 20 Saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: [z]for they are dead which sought the young child's life.

21 And he arose, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel.

22 But when he heard that Archelaus did reign[5] in Judea in the room of his father Herod, [b]he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the paths of Galilee:

23 And he came and dwelt in a city called [c]Nazareth:[6] that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, [f]He shall be called a Nazarene.

John preacheth, 1. His apparel, meat, and baptism, 4. He reprehendeth the Pharisees, 7, and baptizeth Christ in Jordan, 13.

IN [a]those days came [b]John the Baptist, [c]preaching in [d]the wilderness[1] of Judea,

2 And saying, [e]Repent ye: [f]for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

3 For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, [h]Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 And the same John had [l]his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and [k]his meat was locusts[2] and wild honey.

5 ¶ Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And [n]were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

7 ¶ But when he saw many of [p]the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore [n]fruits *meet for repentance:

those Gentiles inquired him out. Note, Many times those who are nearest to the means are furthest from the end, chap. viii. 11, 12. The respect paid to Christ by these Gentiles was a happy presage and specimen of what would follow, when those who were "afar off" should be "made nigh by Christ." 2. That they were scholars, they dealt in arts, curious arts; good scholars should be good Christians, and then they complete their learning when they "learn Christ." 3. That they were "men of the east," who were noted for their soothsaying, Isa. ii. 6. Arabia is called the land of "the east," Gen. xxv. 6, and the Arabians are called "Men of the east," Judg. vi. 3. The presents they brought were the products of that country; the Arabians had done homage to David and Solomon as types of Christ. Jethro and Job were of that country. More than this we have not to say of them. The traditions of the Romish Church are frivolous, that they were in number three, (though one of the ancients says that they were fourteen,) that they were kings, and that they lie buried in Cologne, thence called the three kings of Colen; we covet not to be wise above what is written.

THE STAR.—Ver. 2. The wise men in their country, which was in the "east," had seen an "extraordinary star," such as they had not seen before; which they took to be an indication of an extraordinary person born in the land of "Judea," over which land this star was seen to hover, in the nature of a comet, or a meteor rather, in the lower regions of the air; this differed so much from any thing that was common, that they concluded it to signify something uncommon. Note, Extraordinary appearances of God in the creatures should put us upon inquiring after his mind and will therein; Christ foretold "signs in the heavens." The birth of Christ was notified to the Jewish shepherds by "an angel," to the Gentile philosophers by a "star;" to whom God spake in their own language, and in the way they were best acquainted with. Some think that that very light which the shepherds saw shining round about them the night after Christ was born, was the very same which, to the wise men who lived at such a distance, appeared as a star; which we cannot easily admit, because the star they had seen in the "east" they saw a great while after, leading them to the house where Christ lay; it was a candle set up on purpose to guide them to Christ. Some think this star put them in mind of Balaam's prophecy, that a star should come out of Jacob, pointing at a "sceptre," that shall "rise out of Israel," Numb. xxiv. 17.—Henry.

MASSACRE OF THE CHILDREN IN BETHLEHEM.—Ver. 16—18. Herod, after waiting for some time, found that the wise men did not return to him; and he supposed their conduct to arise from suspicion, or contempt, and deemed himself greatly affronted by it. Thus his jealousy, disappointment, and indignation, concurred in working him up to a degree of rage which bordered on madness; and determining to make sure, as he thought, of the destruction of his hated competitor, he sent forth, as it is probable, some of the soldiers that composed his guard, and slew all the male children that were found in Bethlehem and the dependent villages, which were under two years of age; taking large measure enough, but having respect to the time at which the wise men informed him they had first seen the star. Thus the date of Christ's birth was publicly marked, and all others, that could pretend to be the Messiah, as born at Bethlehem about the same time, were cut off. This event formed another accomplishment of the prophecy of Jeremiah, which we have already considered. Rachel, who lay buried betwixt Rama and Bethlehem, might be poetically represented on this occasion to weep inconsolably for the slaughter of her children. Doubtless, many of the descendants of Joseph and Benjamin were murdered, as well as those of Judah, in this massacre. It may be observed that the evangelist does not say "that it might be fulfilled;" but "then was fulfilled;" for which an apt accommodation may suffice.—Imagination can better conceive, than the pen can describe, the horrors of such a brutal scene, and the anguish of the tender mothers over their infant offspring, torn from their arms, and butchered before their eyes: it is doubtless almost impossible to conceive of any wickedness more completely diabolical.—Scott.

CHAP. III. JOHN THE BAPTIST.—Ver. 1. Some think that John entered on his public ministry about his thirtieth year; but others, who assign a longer time to his ministry before the baptism of Christ, must conclude that he began to preach at an earlier age; as Christ, who was only six months younger, was baptized when thirty years old.—John had spent his youth in retirement, and doubtless in contemplation, and such devout exercises as were suited to prepare him for his extraordinary work; he had attained an uncommon degree of deadness to the world, of holy fortitude, zeal, humility, and devotedness to God, and of every grace and gift which could qualify him for usefulness: and his mortified spirit and conduct were peculiarly suited to that severe ministry of the law, and that work of humiliation and reformation, by which he was to prepare the Jews for receiving their expected Messiah. But as he was a priest, and the son of so distinguished a person as Zechariah; as his birth had been so miraculous and greatly noticed, and himself so very excellent and remarkable a person; so he could not be very obscure in his retirement. Probably his reputation was considerable, before he entered on his public work, which might conduce to the exceeding popularity of his ministry. He was called the Baptist, or the Baptizer, because he admitted the Jews into the number of his disciples by the external rite of baptism, as a sign or profession of repentance. He did not go up to Jerusalem, but opened his ministry in the wilderness, or the least populous part of the country. He came preaching, or as a herald proclaiming the near approach of repentance: [f]but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, [g]whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

12 Whose [i]fan[s] is in his hand, and [k]he will throughly purge his floor, [l]and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

13 ¶ Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

14 But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

16 And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, [x]and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And lo a voice from heaven, saying, [4]This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.[4]

CHAP. IV.

Christ fasteth, is tempted, and overcometh, 1; he beginneth to preach, and calleth some to be his disciples, 17.

THEN [a]was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness [c]to be tempted of the devil.

2 And when he had [d]fasted forty days[1] and forty nights, he was afterward an hungered.

3 And when the tempter came to him, he said, [g]If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

4 But he answered and said, It is written, [k]Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

5 Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple,

6 And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written,[2] [q]He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, [r]lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

7 Jesus said unto him, It is written again, [t]Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

8 Again the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;

9 And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.

10 Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, [c]Satan: for it is written, [d]Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

11 Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.

12 ¶ Now when Jesus had heard that John was *cast into prison, he departed into Galilee;

13 And [b]leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in [l]Capernaum, which is upon the seacoast, in the borders of [k]Zabulon and [l]Nephthalim:

14 That [m]it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

15 The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, [o]Galilee of the Gentiles:

16 The people [p]which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region [q]and shadow of death light is sprung up.

17 ¶ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the [t]kingdom of heaven is at hand.

18 ¶ And Jesus, walking by the [x]sea of Galilee,[3] saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

19 And he saith unto them, Follow me, and [b]I will make you fishers of men.

20 And [c]they straightway left their nets, and followed him.

21 And going on from thence, he saw [d]other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them.

22 And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.

23 ¶ And Jesus went about all Galilee, [g]teaching in their synagogues, and preaching [h]the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.

24 And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him [m]all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were [n]possessed with devils, and those which were [o]lunatic, and [p]those that had the palsy; and he healed them.

25 And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from [r]Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

the Messiah, their expected King.—"By 'those days' is meant, at that time when Jesus remained as yet an inhabitant of Nazareth." [Beza.]—Scott.

DESCENT OF THE SPIRIT ON JESUS AT HIS BAPTISM.—Ver. 16. He "descended on him like a dove;" whether it was a real living dove, or, as was usual in visions, the representation or similitude of a dove, is uncertain. If there must be a bodily shape, Luke iii. 22, it must not be that of a man, for the being seen "in fashion as a man" was peculiar to the second person; none, therefore, was more fit than the shape of one of the fowls of heaven, (heaven being now opened,) and of all fowl none was so significant as the dove. The Spirit of Christ is a dove-like spirit; not like "a silly dove, without heart," Hos. vii. 11, but like an innocent dove without gall. "The Spirit descended," not in the shape of an eagle, which is, though a royal bird, yet a bird of prey, but "in the shape of a dove," than which no creature is more harmless and inoffensive. Such was the Spirit of Christ; "He shall not strive, nor cry;" such must Christians be, "harmless as doves."—Henry.

CHAP. IV. TEMPTATION OF JESUS.—Ver. 1, 2. After the glorious things recorded in the close of the foregoing chapter, we might have expected that Jesus would have been openly acknowledged as the Messiah by the whole Jewish nation; but a very different scene here opens to our view. Immediately after the descent of the Holy Spirit upon him, "he was led up by the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil." He might be disposed for retirement, in order to pour out his soul in prayer and praise, and by fasting and holy exercises to prepare for his most arduous work; yet was he especially led forth to the conflict with the devil, the false accuser, the adversary of God and man. Many expositors think, that this took place in a desert near Jordan, within the promised land; and tradition favours the opinion: yet it is more probable, that it was in the wilderness of Sinai, where Moses, and after him Elijah, fasted forty days and nights.—Christ went forth to be tempted: as our surety, our champion, our David, he went to meet that great "Goliath, who had so long defied the armies of the living God," and had never found one able wholly to prevail against him; and in his success the interest of all his people were involved.—Satan assaulted the first Adam in paradise, and prevailed with him to eat the forbidden fruit, when he might without offence have regaled his appetite with rich variety: but the second Adam met the enemy in a howling wilderness, and thus gave him his full advantage; and he was pleased to sustain by miracle an entire fast of forty days and nights, that nothing might interrupt the interesting conflict. Satan could not but know that this was "the Holy One of God," and for what end he came into the world: but from that furious enmity with which he constantly opposes the purposes of God, though always baffled, he was desirous of assaulting him. Perhaps he had some presumptuous expectation of success: he knew that, as man, Jesus was like unto us in all things, except sin; and if he could gain the least advantage, the whole plan of redemption would be frustrated. As he had therefore put it into the heart of Herod to attempt murdering Jesus in his infancy; so he now attempted to draw him into sin; and if he could not do this, yet he should have the hellish pleasure of giving him uneasiness. For "He suffered, being tempted:" in proportion to his perfect holiness, his feelings would be the more distressing by the detestable suggestions of the enemy.—Scott.

CHRIST'S EARLY MINISTRY.—Ver. 23—25. See here, what an industrious preacher Christ was; He "went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." Observe, 1. What Christ preached—"the gospel of the kingdom." "The kingdom of heaven," that is, of grace and glory, is emphatically the kingdom, the kingdom that was now to come; the kingdom which shall survive, as it doth surpass, all the kingdoms of the earth. The gospel is the charter of that kingdom, containing the King's coronation oath, by which he has graciously obliged himself to pardon, protect, and save the subjects of that kingdom; it contains also their oath of allegiance, by which they oblige themselves to observe his statutes and seek his honour; this is "the gospel of the kingdom." 2. Where he preached—"in the synagogues;" not there only, but there chiefly, because those were "the places of concourse," where "wisdom" was to "lift up her voice," Prov. i. 21; because they were "places of concourse" for religious worship, and there, it was to be hoped, the minds of the people would be prepared to receive "the gospel;" and there the Scriptures of the Old Testament were read, the exposition of which would easily introduce "the gospel of the kingdom." 3. What pains he took in preaching; He "went about all Galilee, teaching." He might have issued out a proclamation to summon all to come to him; but, to show his humility, and the condescensions of his grace, he goes to them: for he "waits to be gracious," and comes "to seek and save." Josephus says, there were above two hundred cities and towns in Galilee, and all, or most of them, Christ visited. He "went about doing good." Never was there such an itinerant preacher, such an indefatigable one, as Christ was; he went from town to town, to beseech poor sinners to be reconciled to God. This is an example to ministers, to lay themselves out to do good, and to "be instant, and constant, "in season and out of season," to preach the word. 4. What a powerful physician Christ was; he "went about" not only teaching, but healing, and both with his word, that he might magnify that above all his name. "He sent his word and healed them." Now observe, What diseases he cured—all without exception. He

2 And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying,

3 Blessed are the poor in spirit: [g]for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.[2]

4 Blessed [h]are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted.

5 Blessed are [i]the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

6 Blessed [j]are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled.

7 Blessed [n]are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

8 Blessed [p]are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

9 Blessed [r]are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

10 Blessed [t]are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

11 Blessed are ye, [x]when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you *falsely for my sake.

12 Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.

13 ¶ Ye are [c]the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.

14 Ye are [e]the light of the world. [f]A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.

15 Neither do men light a candle, and put it under [†]a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

16 Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, [l]and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

17 ¶ Think not that I am come [n]to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, [o]but to fulfil.

18 For verily I say unto you, [q]Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle[s] shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

19 Whosoever therefore shall break one of [t]these least commandments, and shall teach men so,[4] he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called [z]great in the kingdom of heaven.

20 For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed [a]the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, [b]ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

21 ¶ Ye have heard that it was said [‡]by them of old time, [d]Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment:

22 But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and [l]whosoever shall say to his brother, [k]Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool,[5] shall be in danger of hell fire.

23 Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there [q]rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee;

24 Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, [s]and then come and offer thy gift.

25 Agree with thine adversary quickly, [u]whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.

26 Verily I say unto thee, [y]Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.

27 ¶ Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, [z]Thou shalt not commit adultery:

28 But I say unto you, [b]That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

29 And [d]if thy right eye [l]offend thee,[6] [e]pluck it out, and cast it from thee: [f]for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

30 And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

31 It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement:

32 But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.

33 ¶ Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, [m]Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths:

34 But I say unto you, [n]Swear not at all; neither by [o]heaven; for it is God's throne:

35 Nor by [p]the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is [q]the city of the great King.

36 Neither [r]shalt thou swear by thy head, [s]because thou canst not make one hair white or black.

37 But [t]let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these [u]cometh of evil.[7]

"healed all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease." CHAP. V. THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.—Ver. 1. We have here a general account of this sermon. 1. The Preacher was our Lord Jesus, the Prince of preachers, the great Prophet of his church, who "came into the world," to be "the Light of the world." The prophets and John had "done virtuously" in preaching, "but" Christ "excelled them all." He is the Eternal Wisdom, "that lay in the bosom of the Father, before all worlds," and perfectly knew his will, John i. 18; and he is the Eternal Word, by whom he "has in these last days spoken to us." The many miraculous cures wrought by Christ in Galilee, which we read of in the close of the foregoing chapter, were intended to make way for this sermon, and to dispose people to receive instructions from one in whom there appeared so much of a divine power and goodness; and, probably, this sermon was the summary or rehearsal, of what he had preached up and down in the synagogues of Galilee. His text was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." This is a sermon on the former part of that text, showing what it is to repent: it is to reform, both in judgment and practice; and he here tells us wherein, in answer to that question, Mal. iii. 7, "Wherein shall we return?" He afterward preached upon the latter part of the text, when, in divers parables, he showed what the kingdom of heaven is like, chap. xiii. 2. The place was a mountain in Galilee. As in other things, so in this, our Lord Jesus was but ill accommodated; he had no convenient place to preach in, any more than "to lay his head" on. While the Scribes and Pharisees had Moses' chair to sit in, with all possible ease, honour, and state, and there corrupted the law; our Lord Jesus, the great Teacher of truth, is driven out to the desert, and finds no better a pulpit than a mountain can afford; and not one of the holy mountains neither, not one of "the mountains of Zion," but a common mountain; by which Christ would intimate that there is no such distinguishing holiness in places now, under the gospel, as there was under the law; but that it is "the will of God that men should pray" and preach everywhere, any where, provided it be decent and convenient. Christ preached this sermon, which was an exposition of the law, upon a mountain, because upon a mountain the law was given; and this was also a solemn promulgation of the Christian law. But observe the difference: when the law was given, the Lord came down upon the mountain; now the Lord went up: then, he spake in thunder and lightning; now, in a still small voice; then the people were ordered to keep their distance; now they are invited to draw near: a blessed change! If God's grace and goodness are (as certainly they are) his glory, then the glory of the gospel is the glory that excels, for "grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," 2 Cor. iii. 7; Heb. xii. 18, &c. 3. The auditors were his disciples, who "came unto him;" came at his call, as appears by comparing Mark iii. 13, Luke vi. 13. To them he directed his speech, because they followed him for love and learning, while others attended him only for cures. He taught them, because they were willing to be taught; ("the meek will he teach his way;") because they would understand what he taught, which to others was foolishness; and because they were to teach others; and it was therefore requisite that they should have a clear and distinct knowledge of these things themselves. The duties prescribed in this sermon were to be conscientiously performed by all those that would "enter into that kingdom of heaven" which they were sent to set up, with hope to have the benefit of it. 4. The solemnity of his sermon is intimated in that word, "when he was set." Christ preached many times occasionally, and by interlocutory discourses; but this was a set sermon, καθισαντος αυτου, when he had placed himself so as to be best heard. He sat down as a Judge or Lawgiver. It intimates with what sedateness and composure of mind the things of God should be spoken and heard. He sat, that "the Scriptures might be fulfilled," Mal. iii. 3, "He shall sit as a refiner," to purge away the dross, the corrupt doctrines of the sons of Levi. "He sat as in the throne, judging right," Ps. ix. 4; for "the word he spake shall judge us." That phrase, "He opened his mouth," is only a Hebrew periphrasis of speaking, as Job iii. 1. Yet some think it intimates the solemnity of this discourse; the congregation being large, he raised his voice, and spake louder than usual. He had spoken long "by his servants the prophets," and "opened their mouths," Ezek. iii. 27; xxiv. 27; xxxiii. 22; but now "he opened his" own, and spake with freedom, "as one having authority."—Henry.

THE BEATITUDES.—Ver. 3—11. Expositors generally observe, that these beatitudes, as they are called, were calculated to rectify the mistaken notions and expectations of the Jews, respecting the Messiah's kingdom: but as all their prejudices originated from those corrupt propensities, which were common to them with other men; so these maxims of heavenly wisdom are equally adapted to remove our false notions of excellency, honour, and felicity.—All men seek happiness: but none, except those who are taught by the Spirit of God, according to his word, know in what it consists, or how it may be obtained and enjoyed. The beatitudes may therefore be considered as the Christian paradoxes; for they place happiness in such dispositions and circumstances, as men generally deem incompatible with it. All the declarations of Scripture showing who are blessed or happy have reference to our state and character, as sinners; but 45 That [y]ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: [z]for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

46 For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the [a]publicans the same?

47 And if ye salute your brethren only, [b]what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?

48 ¶ Be ye therefore perfect, [c]even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

CHAP. VI.

Of alms, 1; prayer, 5; forgiveness, 14; fasting, 16; our treasure, 19; and against worldly care, 24.

TAKE heed that ye do not your *alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward †of [d]your Father which is in heaven.

2 Therefore [e]when thou doest thine alms, ‡do not sound a trumpet before thee,[1] as the hypocrites do [g]in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

3 But when thou doest alms, [h]let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth:

4 That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, himself shall reward thee openly.

5 ¶ And [i]when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: [k]for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

6 But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

7 But when ye pray, use not vain [m]repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.

8 Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.

9 After this [n]manner therefore pray ye: Our Father [o]which art in heaven, [p]Hallowed be thy name.

10 [q]Thy kingdom come.[2] [r]Thy will be done in earth, [s]as it is in heaven.

11 Give [t]us this day our daily bread.

12 And [u]forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

13 And [x]lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil: For [y]thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

14 ¶ For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you:

15 But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

16 Moreover [z]when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance:[3] for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward.

17 But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face:

18 That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

19 ¶ Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:

20 But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal.

21 For [a]where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

22 ¶ The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

23 But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

24 ¶ No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

25 Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, some point out those privileges by which we become entitled to happiness, Ps. xxxii. 1, and others those dispositions, or that conduct, which are conducive to the enjoyment of it. Such short aphorisms require peculiar care in explaining them; and they commonly admit of limitations, according to other parts of Scripture. In general it may be observed, that the beatitudes do not refer to natural dispositions, that may bear some resemblance to those intended; but to holy dispositions, produced by divine grace rectifying the obliquities of fallen nature; and that where one of them really exists, all the others do, though perhaps not equally prominent.—Scott.

Perfection.—Ver. 48. Our Saviour concludes this subject with this exhortation, "Be ye therefore perfect, as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Which may be understood, 1. In general, including all those things wherein we must be "followers of God as dear children." Note, It is the duty of Christians to desire, and aim at, and press towards a perfection in grace and holiness, Phil. iii. 12—14. And therein we must study to conform ourselves to the example of our heavenly Father, 1 Pet. i. 15, 16. Or, 2. In this particular before mentioned, of "doing good to our enemies," see Luke vi. 36. It is God's perfection to forgive injuries and to entertain strangers, and to do good to the evil and unthankful, and it will be ours to be like him. We that owe so much, that owe our all to the divine bounty, ought to copy it out as well as we can.—Henry.

CHAP. VI. The Lord's Prayer.—The petitions are six; the three first relating more immediately to God and his honour, the three last to our own concerns, both temporal and spiritual; as in the ten commandments, the four first teach us our duty toward God, and the six last our duty toward our neighbour. The method of this prayer teaches us to seek first the "kingdom of God and his righteousness," and then to hope that "other things shall be added." 1. "Hallowed be thy name." It is the same word that in other places is translated "sanctified." But here the old word "hallowed" is retained, only because people were used to it in the Lord's prayer. In these words, We give glory to God; it may be taken not as a petition, but as an adoration; as that "the Lord be magnified," or "glorified," for God's holiness is the greatness and glory of all his perfections. We must begin our prayers with praising God, and it is very fit he should be first served, and that we should give glory to God, before we expect to receive mercy and grace from him. Let him have the praise of his perfections, and then let us have the benefit of them. 2. "Thy kingdom come." This petition has plainly a reference to the doctrine which Christ preached at this time, which John Baptist had preached before, and which he afterwards sent his apostles out to preach—"the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The kingdom of your Father which is in heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah, this is at hand, pray that it may come. Note, We should turn the word we hear into prayer, our hearts should echo to it; does Christ promise, "surely I come quickly," our hearts should answer, "even so come." Ministers should pray over the word: when they preach, "the kingdom of God is at hand," they should pray, "Father, thy kingdom come." What God has promised we must pray for; for promises are given, not to supersede, but to quicken and encourage prayer; and when the accomplishment of a promise is near and at the door, when the kingdom of heaven is at hand, we should then pray for it the more earnestly; "thy kingdom come." 3. "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." We pray that God's kingdom being come, we and others may be brought into obedience to all the laws and ordinances of it. By this let it appear that Christ's kingdom is come, "let God's will be done;" and by this let it appear that it is come as a "kingdom of heaven," let it introduce a "heaven upon earth." We make Christ but a titular Prince, if we call him King, and do not do his will: having prayed that he may rule us, we pray that we may in every thing be ruled by him. Observe the thing prayed for, "thy will be done;" "Lord, do what thou pleasest with me and mine, 1 Sam. iii. 18. I refer myself to thee, and am well satisfied that all thy counsel concerning me should be performed." 4. "Give us this day our daily bread." Every word here has a lesson in it: (1.) We ask for "bread;" that teaches us sobriety and temperance; we ask for "bread," not dainties, not superfluities; that which is wholesome, though it be not nice. (2.) We ask for "our" bread; that teaches us honesty and industry: we do not ask for the bread out of other people's mouths, not "the bread of deceit," Prov. xx. 13, not "the bread of idleness," Prov. xxxi. 27, but the bread honestly gotten. (3.) We ask for our "daily" bread; which teaches us not to "take thought for the morrow," chap vi. 34, but constantly to depend upon divine providence, as those that live from hand to mouth. (4.) We beg of God to "give" it us, not sell it us, nor lend it us, but "give" it. The greatest of men must be beholden to the mercy of God for their "daily bread." (5.) We pray, "Give it to 'us;' not to me only, but to others in common with me." This teaches us charity, and a compassionate concern for the poor and needy. It intimates also, that we ought to pray with our families; we and our households eat together, and therefore ought to pray together. (6.) We pray that God would give it us "this day;" which teaches us to renew the desire of our souls toward God, as the wants of our bodies are renewed; as duly as the day comes, we must pray to our heavenly Father, and reckon we could as well go a day without meat, as without prayer. 5. "And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." This is connected with the former; "and forgive," intimating, that unless our sins be pardoned, we can have no comfort in life, or the supports of it. (1.) A petition; what ye shall put on. [l]Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

26 Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

27 Which of you [o]by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

28 And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider [q]the lilies of the field,[5] how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

29 And yet I say unto you, That [r]even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

30 Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, [t]O ye of little faith?

31 Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

32 (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek:) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

33 But [x]seek ye first [y]the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; [c]and all these things shall be added unto you.

34 Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. [f]Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

CHAP. VII.

Christ, ending his sermon on the mount, reproveth rash judgment, 1; forbiddeth to cast holy things to dogs, 6; exhorteth to prayer, 7; to enter in at the strait gate, 13; to beware of false prophets, 15; and not to be hearers, but doers of the word, 21.

JUDGE [a]not, that ye be not judged.

2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

3 And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, [d]but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?[1]

4 Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

5 Thou hypocrite, [f]first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

6 ¶ Give not that which is holy unto the dogs,[2] neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

7 ¶ Ask, [k]and it shall be given you; [l]seek, and ye shall find; [m]knock, and it shall be opened unto you:

8 For [n]every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

9 Or [o]what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?

10 Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?

11 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

12 Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: [t]for this is the law and the prophets.

13 ¶ Enter ye in [u]at the strait gate:[3] [x]for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, [y]that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat.

14 *Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

15 ¶ [b]Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they [e]are ravening wolves.

16 Ye shall know them by their fruits. [g]Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

17 Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 Every tree that [l]bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

20 Wherefore [m]by their fruits ye shall know them.

21 ¶ Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord,[4] shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

22 Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, [s]have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

24 ¶ Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto [y]a wise man, [z]which built his house upon a rock:

25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: [b]for it was founded upon a rock.

26 And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, [c]and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand:

27 And [d]the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon

[3] By a gate the Jews understand that which leads men into the sense and knowledge of any doctrine (compare Acts xiv. 27; 1 Cor. xvi. 9; and Col. iv. 3). Lightfoot supposes that in this and the next verse there is an allusion to the public and private ways; which, according to their lawyers, were, for a private, four cubits in breadth, and for a public one, sixteen. The strait gate or door he supposes means a little door within a large one.—BOOTHROYD.

"Father in heaven, forgive us our debts," our debts to thee. Our hearts' desire and prayer to our heavenly Father every day should be, that he would "forgive us our debts;" that the obligation to punishment may be cancelled and vacated, that we may "not come into condemnation:" that we may be discharged, and have the comfort of it. (2.) An argument to enforce this petition; "as we forgive our debtors." This is not a plea of merit, but a plea of grace. Note, Those that come to God for the forgiveness of their sins against him, must make conscience of forgiving those who have offended them, else they curse themselves when they say the Lord's prayer. 6. "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." This petition is expressed. (1.) Negatively: "Lead us not into temptation." Having prayed that the guilt of sin may be removed, we pray, as is fit, that we may never return again to folly, that we may not be tempted to it. It is not as if God tempted any to sin; but, "Lord, do not let Satan loose upon us; chain up that "roaring lion," for he is subtle and spiteful; Lord, do not leave us to ourselves, Ps. xix. 13, for we are very weak. (2.) Positively: "But deliver us from evil;" ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ—"from the evil one," the devil, the tempter; "keep us, that either we may not be assaulted by him, or we may not be overcome by those assaults:" Or "from the evil thing," sin, the worst of evils; an evil, an only evil; that evil thing which God hates, and which Satan tempts men to do and destroys them by.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. PRAYER.—Ver. 7—10. Here is a precept in three words to the same purport, "Ask, Seek, Knock;" that is, in one word, "Pray, pray often, pray with sincerity and seriousness; pray, and pray again; make conscience of prayer, and be constant in it; make a business of prayer, and be earnest in it. 'Ask,' as a beggar asks alms." They that would be rich in grace, must betake themselves to the poor trade of begging, and they shall find it a thriving trade. "'Ask;' represent your wants and burthens to God, and refer yourselves to him for support and supply, according to his promise. 'Ask;' as a traveller asks the way; to pray is to 'inquire of God,' Ezek. xxxvi. 37. 'Seek,' as for a thing of value that we have lost; or as the merchantman that 'seeks goodly pearls.' 'Seek by prayer;' Dan ix. 3. 'Knock,' as he that desires to enter into the house knocks at the door." We would be admitted to converse with God, would be taken into his love, and favour, and kingdom; sin has shut and barred the door against us; by prayer, we knock; "Lord, Lord, open to us." Christ knocks at our door, Rev. iii. 20; Cant. v. 2, and allows us to knock at his, which is a favour we do not allow to common beggars. Seeking and knocking imply something more than asking and praying. 1. We must not only "ask," but "seek;" we must second our prayers with our endeavours; we must, in the use of the appointed means, "seek" for that which we "ask" for, else we tempt God. When the dresser of the vineyard asked for a year's respite for the barren fig-tree, he added, "I will dig about it," Luke xiii. 7, 8. God gives knowledge and grace to those that search the Scriptures, and wait at Wisdom's gates; and power against sin to those that avoid the occasion of it. 2. We must not only "ask," but "knock;" we must come to God's door, must "ask" importunately; not only pray, but plead and wrestle with God; we must "seek" diligently, we must continue knocking; must persevere in prayer, and in the use of means; must endure to the end in the duty.

THE GOLDEN RULE.—Ver. 12. The meaning of this rule lies in three things. 1. We must do that to our neighbour which we ourselves acknowledge to be fit and reasonable: the appeal is made to our own judgment, and the discovery of our judgment is referred to that which is our own will and expectation, when it is our own case. 2. We must put other people upon the level with ourselves, and reckon we are as much obliged to them, as they to us. We are as much bound to the duty of justice as they, and they as much entitled to the benefit of it as we. 3. We must, in our dealings with men, suppose ourselves in the same particular case and circumstances with those we have to do with, and deal accordingly. If I were making such a one's bargain, labouring under such a one's infirmity and affliction, how would I desire and expect to be treated? And this is a just supposition, because we know not how soon their case may really be ours: indeed we may fear, lest God by his judgments should do to us as we have done to others, if we have not done as we would be done by.

THE GREAT TEACHER.—Ver. 28, 29. 1. "They were astonished at his doctrine;" it is to be feared that few of them were brought to follow him: but for the present, they were filled with wonder. Note, It is possible for people to admire good preaching, and yet to remain in ignorance and unbelief; to be astonished, and yet not sanctified. 2. The reason was because he taught them "as one having authority, and not as the scribes." The scribes pretended to as much authority as any teachers whatsoever, and were supported by all the external advantages that could be obtained, but their preaching was mean, and flat, and jejune: they spake as those that were not themselves masters of what they preached: the word did not come from them with any life or force; they delivered it as a school-boy says his lesson; but Christ delivered his discourse, as a judge gives his charge. He did indeed, dominari inconcionibus—deliver his discourses with a tone of authority; his lessons were laws; his word a word of command. Christ, upon the mountain, showed more true authority than the scribes in Moses' seat. Thus when Christ teaches by his Spirit in the soul, he teaches with authority. He says, "Let there be light, and there is light."—Henry.

that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.

28 ¶ And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine:

29 For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

Christ cleanseth the leper, 2; healeth the centurion's servant, 5, Peter's mother-in-law, 14, and many other diseased, 16; sheweth how he is to be followed, 19; stilleth the tempest on the sea, 24; driveth devils out of two men possessed, 28; and suffereth them to go into the swine, 31.

WHEN he was [a]come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him.

2 And, [c]behold, there came [d]a leper, and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

3 And Jesus [g]put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, [h]I will; be thou clean.[1] [i]And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.

4 And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man; but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

5 ¶ And when Jesus was [n]entered into Capernaum, there came unto him [o]a centurion,[2] beseeching him,

6 And saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented.

7 And Jesus saith unto him, [r]I will come and heal him.

8 The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof; [t]but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed.

9 For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, [u]Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, [x]Do this, and he doeth it.

10 When Jesus heard it, [y]he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, [z]I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

11 And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall [b]sit down[3] with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, [c]in the kingdom of heaven:

12 But [d]the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

13 And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour.

14 ¶ And when Jesus was come [i]into Peter's house, he saw his [k]wife's[4] mother laid, and sick of a fever.

22 But Jesus said unto him, [d]Follow me; [e]and let the dead bury their dead.[7]

23 ¶ And when he was entered into a ship, his disciples followed him.

24 And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep.

25 And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, [k]save us: we perish.

26 And he saith unto them, [l]Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, [m]and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm.

27 But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!

28 ¶ And when he was come to the other side, into the country of the [p]Gergesenes,[8] there met him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, [r]so that no man might pass by that way.

29 And, behold, they cried out, saying, [s]What have we to do with thee, Jesus, [t]thou Son of God? art thou come hither to [u]torment us before the time?

30 And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding.

31 So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine.

32 And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine; and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters.

33 And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing,

CHAP. VIII. The Centurion's Faith.—Ver. 8, 9. When we remember that Christ appeared in all respects as a poor Jew, "who had not where to lay his head;" and that this man was a Roman, to whom the Jews were subject, and one that lived in affluence; we shall perceive that his humble reverence of Christ was in every respect extraordinary. He added, that it was in no wise necessary for Jesus thus to demean himself, for he could remove the disease by a word spoken at a distance. This he illustrated by his own case: he was only an inferior officer, subject to the authority of his tribune and general: yet, having a company of soldiers under his command, he found them prompt to obey his orders, whether delivered on the spot, or sent to them at a distance; and in like manner his servant implicitly obeyed his word: much more, then, would diseases obey the command of him, who was the king of glory and the Lord of all. We can hardly conceive of a higher expression of confidence in the power of Christ, as the Son of God, and as possessed of unlimited authority, than this was.—"If I, who am subject to the power of another, have so much power over my servants, that they instantly do whatever I would have them: how much more shall all things which thou requirest be done at thy command, who art subject to the power of none!"—Scott.

Poverty of Christ.—Ver. 20. It is strange in itself, that the Son of God, when he came into the world, should put himself into such a very low condition, as to want the convenience of a certain resting-place, which the meanest of the creatures have. If he would "take our nature upon him," one would think, he should have taken it in its best estate and circumstances: no, he takes it in its worst. See here, First, How well provided for the inferior creatures are: "The foxes have holes;" though they are not only not useful, but hurtful, to man, yet God provides holes for them in which they are earthed: man endeavours to destroy them, but thus they are sheltered; their holes are their castles. "The birds of the air," though they take no care for themselves, yet are taken care of, and "have nests," Ps. civ. 17; nests in the field; some of them nests in the house; in God's courts, Ps. lxxxiv. 3. Secondly, How poorly the Lord Jesus was provided for. It may encourage us to trust God for necessaries, that the beasts and birds have such good provision; and may comfort us, if we want necessaries, that our Master did so before us. Note, Our Lord Jesus, when he was here in the world, submitted to the disgraces and distresses of extreme poverty; "for our sakes he became poor," very poor. He had not a settlement, had not a place of repose, not a house of his own, to put his head in, not a pillow of his own, to lay his head on. He and his disciples lived upon the charity of well-disposed people, that "ministered to him of their substance," Luke viii. 2. Christ submitted to this, not only that he might in all respects humble himself, and fulfil the Scriptures, which spake of him as "poor and needy," but that he might show us the vanity of worldly wealth, and teach us to look upon it with a holy contempt; that he might purchase better things for us, and so "make us rich," 2 Cor. viii. 9.—Henry.

The Storm.—Ver. 23—27. Christ having entered the ship, or boat, which the disciples had provided, set sail, being accompanied by some other small vessels: but instead of the fair voyage, which probably they expected, they were overtaken with a terrible storm: so that the ship was speedily covered with the waves, and apparently ready to sink; yet amidst all this confusion and distress, Jesus lay fast asleep. His human nature, like to ours in every thing but sin, was wearied with incessant fatigue; and he willingly yielded to sleep, foreseeing the storm, that his power might thus be more noticed. But the disciples, trembling lest they should be swallowed up by the waves, and having no resource but in his power, came and awoke him, saying, "Lord, save us, we perish." Considering all that they had heard and seen of his power, this was only weak faith; and their fears were evidences of much remaining unbelief. It was impossible that the vessel which carried him could sink: and in his divine nature he was as able to restrain the winds and waves, when his human nature lay asleep, as to cure the paralytic by a word spoken at a distance. Having therefore first rebuked them as men of little faith, he next, with the authority of the Lord and Governor of the creation, rebuked the winds and waves, (as a master would rebuke a company of unruly servants;) and at his omnipotent word, the winds suddenly ceased to blow, the tempestuous sea (contrary to its nature) immediately became smooth, and a great calm succeeded. This filled the disciples with the greatest astonishment; and they said to each other, "What manner of person is this?" No doubt, he is more than man; for with divine "authority he commands even the winds and waves, and they obey him!"

The Demons and the Swine.—Ver. 30—32. Swine were unclean animals by the Mosaic law, and the very touch of them defiled a man; yet the Gadarenes fed them in great numbers to sell to their Gentile neighbours. The evil spirits, therefore, being reluctant to quit the region where their influence had been so entire, formed a subtle plan of prejudicing the inhabitants against Jesus, that they might be induced to reject his instructions. Aware of the value they put upon the swine because of their gains, they requested permission to possess those animals; and he, probably, to punish the avarice of the Gadarenes; to give a decisive proof of the reality of possessions; and to show the destructive rage and power of evil spirits, as well as the limits assigned to their influence, permitted them. Immediately, therefore, they impelled the swine to such fury, that the whole herd rushed from a precipice into the sea, and was drowned. Ver. 33, 34. It must be supposed, that the keepers were exceedingly affrighted, as well as and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils.

34 And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus; and when they saw him, they besought him that he would depart out of their coasts.

CHAP. IX.

Christ cureth the palsy, 2; calleth Matthew, 9; eateth with publicans and sinners, 10.

AND [a]he entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into [b]his own city.[1]

2 And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus, seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, [c]Son, [f]be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee.

3 And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, [h]This man blasphemeth.

4 And Jesus, [i]knowing their thoughts,[2] said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?

5 For whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, [m]Arise, and walk?

6 But that ye may know [n]that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy,) [o]Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house.

7 And he arose, and departed to his house.

8 But when the multitude saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.

9 ¶ And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man, [r]named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom:[3] and he saith unto him, [s]Follow me. And he arose, and followed him.

10 ¶ And it came to pass, [t]as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, [u]many publicans and sinners[4] came and sat down with him and his disciples.

11 And when the Pharisees saw it, [x]they said unto his disciples, [y]Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?

12 But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, [z]They that be whole[5] need not a physician, but they that are sick.

13 But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come [c]to call the righteous, [d]but sinners to repentance.

14 ¶ Then came to him the disciples of John, saying, Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but thy disciples fast not?

15 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bridechamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come, [h]when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast.

16 No man putteth a piece of *new cloth unto an old garment; for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse.

17 Neither do men put new wine into old bottles;[6] else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

18 ¶ While he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and [e]worshipped him, saying, [p]My daughter is even now dead: but [q]come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live.

19 And Jesus arose and followed him, and so did his disciples.

20 ¶ (And, behold, a woman which was diseased with [t]an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him,[7] and [u]touched the hem of his garment:

21 For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole.

22 But Jesus turned him about; and when he saw her, he said, [z]Daughter, be of good comfort; [a]thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.)

23 ¶ And when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise,[8]

24 He said unto them, [e]Give place; for the maid is [f]not dead, but sleepeth. [g]And they laughed him to scorn.

25 But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose.

26 [†]And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

27 ¶ And when Jesus departed thence, [l]two blind men followed him, crying, and saying, [m]Thou son of David,[9] [n]have mercy on us.

28 And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him: and Jesus saith unto them, [p]Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord.

29 Then [q]touched he their eyes, saying, [r]According to your faith be it unto you.

30 And [s]their eyes were opened; and Jesus straitly charged them, saying, See that no man know it.

31 But they, when they were departed, [u]spread abroad his fame in all that country.

32 ¶ As they went out, behold, they brought to him [x]a dumb man possessed of a devil.

33 And when the devil was cast out, [y]the dumb spake: and the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel.[10] astonished, at this strange event; and they reporting it in the city Gadara, the inhabitants in general came to Jesus; yet not to receive instruction, or implore protection, or crave miraculous assistance. Probably, their guilty consciences made them dread his power; and the loss of the swine, no doubt, highly displeased them: but not venturing to attempt violence against so extraordinary a person, they presented one single request to him, namely, "that he would depart out of their coasts;" which was in fact to say, "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God," and proved them to be under the power of Satan, as much as the demoniacs had been, but in another and more criminal sense.—"Where men live like swine, there doth not Christ tarry, but devils." [Beza.]—Scott.

34 But the Pharisees said, He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.

CHAP. IX.—FORGIVENESS AND HEALING.—Ver. 2. "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee." This was a sovereign cordial to a sick man, and was enough to "make all his bed in his sickness;" and to make it easy to him. We read not of any thing said to Christ; probably the poor sick man could not speak for himself, and they that brought him chose rather to speak by actions than words; they set him before Christ; that was enough. Note, It is not vain to present ourselves and our friends to Christ, as the objects of his pity. Misery cries as well as sin, and mercy is no less quick of hearing than justice. Here is in what Christ said, 1. A kind compellation; Son. Note, Exhortations and consolations to the afflicted speak to them as to sons, for afflictions are fatherly discipline, Heb. xii. 5. 2. A gracious encouragement; "'Be of good cheer.' Have a good heart on it; cheer up thy spirits." Probably the poor man, when let down among them all in his bed, was put out of countenance, was afraid of a rebuke for being brought in so rudely: but Christ does not stand upon ceremony; he bids him "be of good cheer;" all would be well, he should not be laid before Christ in vain. Christ bids him "be of good cheer;" and then cures him. He would have those to whom he deals his gifts, to be cheerful in seeking him, and in trusting in him; to be of good courage. 3. A good reason for that encouragement; "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Now this may be considered as an introduction to the cure of his bodily distemper; "Thy sins are pardoned, and therefore thou shalt be healed." Note, As sin is the cause of sickness, so the remission of sin is the comfort of recovery from sickness; not but that sin may be pardoned, and yet the sickness not removed; not but that the sickness may be removed, and yet the sin not pardoned: but if we have the comfort of our reconciliation to God, with the comfort of our recovery from sickness, this makes it a mercy indeed to us, as to Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 17.—Henry.

CALL OF MATTHEW.—Ver. 9. Matthew here gives an account of the manner in which he was called to follow Christ. He was also called Levi; it being common for men to be known by more names than one: and, probably, Matthew was his name when a publican; for he always calls himself by it; and Levi, that given him by way of honourable distinction, when he became a follower of Christ, for the other evangelists generally call him so. Thus Saul, when he became an apostle, was named Paul. Matthew was originally a publican, or a collector of the taxes and customs. These were generally farmed out to the best bidder by public sale; and they who hired the revenues of a large district, were used to let them out in subdivisions to inferior publicans, who were assisted by the Roman soldiery in collecting them.—The Jews were very averse to the Roman government, out of mistaken principles of conscience, as well as from love to independence: and they generally deemed it very criminal for their countrymen to follow this employment, so that nothing but the love of gain could induce them to engage in it. In general they were men of bad moral characters; and many of them increased the odium against the order, by exacting more than their due, and enforcing their demands by military violence. The office therefore rendered a man infamous: though they were not all so avaricious and iniquitous, as this seemed to imply. Matthew was of this ensnaring and disgraceful occupation; and was sitting in his office, receiving the taxes and customs imposed on goods that were landed and embarked, when Jesus spoke to him. His hands were full of business, perhaps his head of calculations, and his heart of covetousness: for it is not certain that he had previously paid any regard to the doctrine of Christ. But when our Lord commanded him to follow him, such a power accompanied the word, as influenced him to renounce immediately his lucrative employment, and to become his constant attendant, that he might be made a preacher of the gospel. So that he arose without delay, and leaving his business to his partners, or assistants, he went after Jesus, and never returned to his former occupation.—Scott.

CHRIST'S SYMPATHY.—Ver. 22. Jesus puts gladness into the woman's heart, by that word, "Daughter, be of good comfort." She feared being chidden for coming clandestinely, but she is encouraged. 1. He calls her daughter, for he spoke to her with the tenderness of a father, as he did "to the man sick of the palsy," ver. 2, whom he called son. Note, Christ had comforts ready for "the daughters of Zion," that are of a sorrowful spirit, as Hannah was, 1 Sam. i. 15. Believing women are Christ's daughters, and he will own them as such. 2. He bids her "be of good comfort:" she has reason to be so, if Christ own her for a daughter. Note, The saints' consolation is founded in their adoption. His bidding her be comforted, brought comfort with it, as his saying be ye whole, brought health with it. Note, It is the will of Christ that his people should be comforted, and it is his prerogative to command comfort to troubled spirits. He "creates the fruit of his lips, peace," Isa. lvii. 19.—Henry.

35 And [b]Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease, among the people.

36 ¶ But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they [‡]fainted, and were scattered abroad, [d]as sheep having no shepherd.

37 Then saith he unto his disciples, [e]The harvest truly is plenteous, [f]but the labourers are few:

38 Pray ye therefore [h]the Lord of the harvest, [i]that he will send forth labourers into his harvest.

CHAP. X.

The apostles are sent to do miracles, and to preach.

AND when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power[1] [*]against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease.

2 Now the names of the twelve apostles are these, the first,[2] [d]Simon, who is called Peter, and [e]Andrew his brother; [f]James the son of Zebedee, [g]and John his brother;

3 [h]Philip, and Bartholomew; [i]Thomas, and [k]Matthew the publican; [l]James the son of Alpheus, [m]and Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddeus;

4 [n]Simon the Canaanite, [o]and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

5 These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, [q]Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not:

6 But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel:

7 And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

8 [r]Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: [s]freely ye have received, freely give.

9 [†]Provide neither gold,[3] nor silver, nor brass in your purses;

10 Nor scrip[4] for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet [‡]staves: [d]for the workman is worthy of his meat.

11 And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy;[5] and there abide till ye go thence.

12 And when ye come into an house, [g]salute it.

13 And if the house be [h]worthy, let your peace come upon it; but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

14 And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, [k]shake off the dust of your feet.

15 Verily I say unto you, [m]It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha [n]in the day of judgment, than for that city.

16 ¶ Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore [p]wise as serpents, [q]and [s]harmless as doves.[6]

17 But [r]beware of men; [s]for they will deliver you up to the [t]councils,[7] and they will [u]scourge you in their synagogues:[8]

18 And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles.

19 But [s]when they deliver you up, [t]take no thought how or what ye shall speak; for [b]it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak.[9]

20 For it is not ye that speak, [c]but the Spirit of [d]your Father which speaketh in you.

21 And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death.

22 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

23 But [k]when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not [l]have gone over the cities of Israel, [l]till the Son of man be come.

24 The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord.

25 It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. [n]If they have called the Master of the house [*]Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?

26 Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known.

27 What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops.

28 And fear not them which kill the body but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

29 Are not two sparrows sold for [†]a farthing?[10] [y]and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father.

30 But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.

31 Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.

32 Whosoever therefore shall [b]confess me before men, [c]him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.

33 But whosoever shall [d]deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven.

The Synagogue.—Ver. 35. The temple was the centre of the Jewish worship, and no sacrifices might be offered elsewhere: but in process of time it was found necessary, to have other places set apart for public prayer and instruction. For these purposes synagogues were built, and after the captivity they became general in all the cities and villages; and probably they were proportionably more numerous than churches and chapels are with us. The word synagogue, signifies gathering together; or a congregation, or the place of a congregation. Learned men think, that forms of worship were statedly used, on certain days in the week, as well as on the Sabbath-days; and the Scriptures, divided into portions, were constantly read in them: so that they were very useful in keeping the people from idolatry. The Levites and Scribes might commonly officiate in them, but this service was not restricted to them: they had stated rulers and officers, but no regular pastors or teachers; so that competent persons occasionally gave exhortations as they were disposed or desired to do it; and the case was the same in other nations where the Jews resided. Christ therefore went round the country teaching in the synagogues, and no one attempted to interrupt or hinder him.—Scott.

CHAP. X. The Apostles.—Ver. 1—4. It is thought that the apostles had been called to a constant attendance on Christ, a considerable time before, as persons intended for some important service. At length they were solemnly appointed, and endued by their Lord with the power of casting out unclean spirits, and healing diseases in his name, to confirm their doctrine; and sent forth, by two and two, into different parts of the land, to prepare the people to receive him. The word apostle signifies a messenger, and as such it is given to Christ himself, Heb. iii. 1. They were his messengers, sent forth to proclaim his kingdom; and after his resurrection, they were the chosen witnesses of that event. They were twelve in number, probably with reference to the twelve tribes of Israel. We have here a catalogue of their names, in which some few things require consideration. Simon is first mentioned, both in this and other places; his original name signifies hearing. But our Lord, when Simon first came to him, named him Cephas, or Peter, from the word which signifies a rock, or a stone; denoting that he would prove a firm and stedfast man, and stable in professing and supporting the truth of the gospel. He is first mentioned, not as having authority over the other apostles, which some vainly pretend; but because he was the elder of the first two brothers, who were called to a constant attendance on Christ; and because his abilities, zeal, and disposition, combined in rendering him a principal and conspicuous character among them: his brother Andrew was sent out along with him. James, whom Herod slew, Acts. xii. 1, 2, and John the Evangelist, his brother, were sent forth together; they were the second pair who were called to follow Christ. Philip and Bartholomew, of whom we know less, were sorted together. Thomas, who is commonly called Didymus, or the twin, was joined with Matthew, the converted publican. James the son of Alpheus, who wrote the epistle, was joined with Lebbeus, or Thaddeus, the same person who is elsewhere called Jude, or Judas; the names here given him are supposed to signify hearty, or cordial, to distinguish him from the other Judas, who was a hypocrite. The latter was joined with Simon the Canaanite, or the man of Cana, as some explain it; though others suppose the word to be equivalent to Zelotes, or the zealous, by which he is elsewhere distinguished, Acts i. 13. The other Judas is always called Iscariot, which is generally supposed to mean "the man of Carioth;" but some think that it is derived from a word signifying suspension, and that it refers to the manner of his death. Some think that Bartholomew was the same whom St. John calls Nathaniel.—Scott.

Their Commission.—Ver. 7. "As ye go, preach." They were to be itinerant preachers: wherever they come they must proclaim the beginning of the gospel, saying, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Not that they must say nothing else, but this must be their text; on this subject they must enlarge: let people know that the kingdom of the Messiah, who is the Lord from heaven, is now to be set up according to the Scriptures; from whence it follows, that men must "repent" of their sins, and forsake them, that they might be admitted to the privileges of that kingdom. It is said, (Mark vi. 12,) they went out and preached that men should repent; which was the proper use and application of this doctrine, concerning the approach of the "kingdom of heaven." They must therefore expect to hear more of this long looked for Messiah shortly, and must be ready to receive his doctrine, to believe in him, and to submit to his yoke. The preaching of this was like the morning light, to give notice of the approach of the rising sun. How unlike was this to the preaching of Jonah, which proclaimed ruin at hand! Jonah iii. 4. This proclaims salvation at hand, "nigh them that fear God; mercy and truth meet together," Ps. lxxxv. 9, 10; that is, "the kingdom of heaven at hand:" not so much the personal presence of the king; that must not be doated upon; but a spiritual kingdom which is to be set up, when his bodily presence is removed, in the hearts of men.—Henry.

Persecution.—Ver. 21, 22. The apostles might imagine, that their harmless, holy, and prudent conduct, their beneficent miracles, and the glad tidings of the Messiah's advent, would conciliate them favour from great numbers. But, on the contrary, Christ assured them that they would experience the most rancorous enmity even from near relations; for the gospel being contrary to the prejudices, pride, and lusts of men, interfering with their worldly interests and projects, and opposed by those evil spirits, which

John sendeth his disciples to Christ, 2. The testimony of Christ concerning John, 7. Christ upbraideth the unthankfulness and impatience of Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, 20; and praiseth his Father's wisdom in revealing the gospel to the simple, 25.

AND it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence, to teach and preach in their cities.

2 ¶ Now, [c] when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples,

3 And said unto him, [f] Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?[1]

4 Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see:

5 The blind receive their sight,[2] and the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them.

6 And [n] blessed is he, [o] whosoever shall not be offended in me.

8 But what went ye out for to see? [s] A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses.

work in the children of disobedience, would certainly occasion vehement convulsions in cities and nations, and excite the jealousy of rulers; throw men into different parties, and produce violent controversies, and at length furious persecutions. Then the enemies of the truth would forget the ties of consanguinity, or affinity: brethren would apprehend and accuse one another, and procure each other's death; parents, regardless of natural affection, would prosecute their own children to death; and even children, in violation of all their duties and obligations, would rise up against their own parents to procure their execution: nay, the preachers and professors of Christianity would be hated by men of all nations, sects, and characters, for the sake of Christ; yea, by all men, except those who were won over to embrace the gospel. This would expose them to such dangers, hardships, and sufferings, as would violently tempt them to apostatize. But they who continued to cleave to the Lord, and held out to the end, would be preserved from all real damage, and recompensed with everlasting felicity; whilst apostates would be finally ruined and lost.—Scott.

Reward of Christian Kindness.—Ver. 42. Kindnesses shown to Christ's people and ministers shall not only be accepted, but richly and suitably rewarded. There is a great deal to be gotten by doing good offices to Christ's disciples. If it be done to the Lord, he will repay them again with interest; for he is "not unrighteous to forget any labour of love," Heb. vi. 10. They shall "receive a reward," and in no wise "lose it." He does not say that they deserve a reward; we cannot merit any thing as wages from the hand of God; but they shall "receive a reward" from the free gift of God; and they shall "in no wise lose it," as good services often do among men; because they who should reward them are either false or forgetful. The reward may be deferred, the full reward will be deferred, till the resurrection of the just, but it shall in no wise be "lost," nor shall they be any "losers" by the delay.—Henry.

CHAP. XI. John's Embassy to Jesus.—The question they had to propose to him was, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" This was a serious and important question; "Art thou the Messiah promised, or not? Art thou the Christ? Tell us." 1. It is taken for granted that the Messiah should come. It was one of the names by which he was known to the Old Testament saints, "he that cometh, or shall come," Ps. cxviii. 26. He is now come, but there is another coming of his which we still expect. 2. They intimate that if this be not "he," they would look for another." Note, We must not be weary of looking for him that is to come, nor ever say, we will no more expect him till we come to enjoy him. Though he tarry, wait for him, for he that shall come will come, though not in our time. 3. They intimate likewise, that if they be convinced that this is he, they will not be sceptics, they will be satisfied, and will look "for no other." 4. They therefore ask, "Art thou he? John had said for his part, "I am not the Christ," John i. 20. Now, (1.) Some think that John sent this question for his own satisfaction. It is true he had borne a noble testimony to Christ; he had declared him to be the "Son of God," John i. 34, the Lamb of God, ver. 29, and he that "should baptize you with the Holy Ghost," ver. 33, and "sent of God," John iii. 34, which were great things. But he desired to be further and more fully assured, that he was the Messiah that had been so long promised and expected. Note, In matters relating to Christ and our salvation by him, it is good to be sure. Christ appeared not in that external pomp and power in which it was expected he should appear; his own disciples stumbled at this, and perhaps John did so; Christ saw something of this at the bottom of this inquiry, when he said, "blessed is he who shall not be offended in me." Note, It is hard, even for good men, to bear up against vulgar errors. (2.) John's doubt might arise from his own present circumstances. He was a prisoner, and might be tempted to think, if Jesus be indeed the Messiah, whence is it that I, his friend and forerunner, am brought into this trouble, and am left to be so long in it, and he never looks after me, never visits me, nor sends to me, inquires not after me, does nothing either to sweeten my imprisonment or hasten my enlargement?—Henry.

Christ's Answer.—Ver. 6. To the question thus proposed, our Lord answered rather by actions than by words: probably lest an explicit reply should give his enemies a handle against him. He therefore wrought many miracles in the presence of John's messengers; and ordered them to report to him what they had witnessed, as well as what they had heard; and especially to show him that the poor and lowly had the gospel preached to them: they were evangelized, and received it, whilst the rich, learned, and powerful, rejected Christ and his doctrine. This exactly accorded to the prophecies concerning the Messiah; but was contrary to the conduct of deceivers, who, out of carnal policy, generally address themselves to the great and powerful. John had wrought no miracle: and this rendered Christ's miracles the more decisive evidence; especially as they were predicted by that very prophet, who also foretold John's preparatory ministry; the contempt, opposition, and ill usage that the Messiah would meet with, and his humiliation, sufferings, and death.—Scott.

The Invitation of Mercy.—Ver. 28. "Come unto me all ye that labour." Observe, 1. The character of the persons invited; "all that labour and are heavy laden." This is a word in season to him that is weary, Isa. l. 4. Those who complain of the burthen of the ceremonial law, which was an intolerable yoke, and was made much more so by the tradition of the elders, Luke xi. 46, let them come to Christ, and they shall be made the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

28 ¶ [r]Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

29 Take [s]my yoke upon you, and learn of me; [t]for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

30 For my yoke is easy,[8] and my burden is light.

5 Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the sabbath-days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?

6 But I say unto you, [l]That in this place is one greater[1] than the temple.

7 But if ye had known what this meaneth, [l]I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless.

8 For [n]the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath-day.

9 ¶ And when he was departed thence, [o]he went into their synagogue:

10 And, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath-days? that they might accuse him.

11 And he said unto them, [s]What man shall there be among you that shall have one sheep, [t]and if it fall into a pit on the sabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out?

12 How much then [u]is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore [x]it is lawful to do well on the sabbath-days.[2]

13 Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; [y]and it was restored whole, like as the other.

14 ¶ Then the Pharisees went out, and [*]held a council[3] against him, how they might destroy him.

15 But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all; easy; he came to free his church from this yoke, to cancel the imposition of those carnal ordinances, and to introduce a purer and more spiritual way of worship; but it is rather to be understood of the burthen of sin, both the guilt and the power of it. Note, All those, and those only, are invited to rest in Christ, that are sensible of sin as a burthen, and groan under it; that are not only convinced of the evil of sin, of their own sin, but are contrite in soul for it; that are really sick of their sins, weary of the service of the world and of the flesh; that see their state sad and dangerous by reason of sin, and are in pain and fear about it, as Ephraim, (Jer. xxxi. 18—20,) the prodigal, (Luke xv. 17,) the publican, (Luke xviii. 13,) Peter's hearers, (Acts ii. 37,) Paul, (Acts ix. 4, 6, 9,) the jailor, Acts xvi. 29, 30. This is a necessary preparative for pardon and peace. The comforter must first convince, John xvi. 8; I have torn, and then will heal. The invitation itself: "Come unto me." That glorious display of Christ's greatness, which we had, ver. 27, as Lord of all, might frighten us from him, but see here how he holds out "the golden sceptre," that we may touch the top of it, and may live. Note, It is the duty and interest of weary "and heavy laden" sinners "to come to Jesus Christ."—Henry.

CHAP. XII. Pharisaic Bigotry.—Ver. 1, 2. Christ by justifying his disciples in plucking the ears of corn on the Sabbath-day, shows that "works of necessity" are "lawful" on that day. Now here observe, 1. What it was that the disciples did. They were following their Master one Sabbath-day through a corn-field; it is likely they were going to the synagogue, (ver. 9, for it becomes not Christ's disciples to take "idle walks" on that day,) and "they were hungry;" let it be no disparagement to our Master's housekeeping. But we will suppose they were so intent upon the Sabbath-work, that they forgot to eat bread; had spent so much time in their morning worship, that they had no time for their morning meal, but came out fasting, because they would not come late to the synagogue. Providence ordered it that they "went through the corn," and there they were supplied. 2. What was the offence that the Pharisees took at this? It was but a dry breakfast, yet the Pharisees would not let them eat that in quietness. They did not quarrel with them for taking another man's corn, (they were no great zealots for justice,) but for doing it "on the Sabbath-day;" for plucking and rubbing the ears of corn on that day, was expressly forbidden by the tradition of the elders, for this reason, because it was a "kind of reaping." Note, It is no new thing for the most harmless and innocent actions of Christ's disciples to be evil spoken of, and reflected upon as unlawful, especially by those who are zealous for their own inventions and impositions. The Pharisees complained of them to their Master for doing that which it was not "lawful to do." Note, Those are no friends to Christ and his disciples, who make that to be unlawful which God has not made to be so.—Henry.

Sin against the Holy Ghost.—Ver. 31, 32. The words were addressed immediately, as a solemn warning, to the proud and malignant Pharisees. Our Lord first declared, that "all manner of sin and blasphemy should be forgiven 'unto men;'" perhaps tacitly comparing the happy situation of men under a dispensation of mercy, with that of apostate angels for whom there is no forgiveness; but though this was a general rule, it admitted of one exception; for, "the blasphemy against the Spirit should never be forgiven." Indeed whoever should speak blasphemous words against the Son of man, the Messiah, might repent and be pardoned: but whoever should thus speak against the Holy Spirit, could never be pardoned, either in this world or the next. It does not follow, that any sin which is not forgiven here, will hereafter be given; the expression can at most only show that some of the Jews had notions of this kind, as well as the papists and other professed Christians; but the expression seems to be no more than a form of speech common among the Jews, when they asserted strongly that any thing should never be done. The circumstances in which this declaration was made, should carefully be adverted to. The Pharisees had spoken most blasphemous words against Christ and his miracles, which were indeed wrought by the power of the Holy Ghost, but not under the immediate dispensation of the Spirit. They had gone as far in impiety as they could, without finally excluding themselves from forgiveness. They had spoken blasphemy against the Son of man, and ascribed his miracles to the power of the devil; but still they might be pardoned, and one further method would be used to convince them. In a short time, Christ would be crucified, and then rise from the dead and ascend into heaven; when, being exalted to the right hand of the Father, he would send forth the Holy Spirit upon his apostles and disciples, enabling them to perform various wonderful works in his name, in proof of their testimony concerning his resurrection and ascension. He, therefore, who "then" should blaspheme this last and most complete attestation to Jesus, as the promised Messiah, and, from determined enmity to him and his kingdom, deliberately ascribe the operations of the Holy Spirit to Satan; would be given up to final obduracy and impenitency, and thus never be pardoned, but sink into final perdition. [Whitby.]—None therefore could commit this sin, who did not witness the effects of the pouring out of the Holy Spirit on the apostles; nor were all degrees of opposition to, or perversion of, these operations thus finally destructive. Peter does not seem to have concluded that Simon Magus had sinned beyond the reach of mercy, when he offered to buy the power of conferring the Holy Ghost, Acts viii. 18—24. But it [illegible] that some kinds of apostacy, (when attended with very peculiar circumstances

39 But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas:

Of the sower and the seed, 3. Divers other parables, 24. Why Christ spake in parables, 35.

THE same day went Jesus out of the house, and [a]sat by the sea-side.

2 And [b]great multitudes were gathered together unto him, [c]so that he went into a ship, and sat; and the whole multitude stood on the shore.

3 And he spake many things unto them [d]in parables,[1] saying, Behold, [e]a sower went forth to sow:

4 And when he sowed, some seeds fell by [f]the way-side,[2] and the fowls[3] came and devoured them up:

5 Some fell upon [g]stony places, where they had not much earth; and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth:

6 And when the sun was up, they were scorched; and, because they had no root, they withered away:

7 And some fell [k]among thorns; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them:

8 But other fell into [l]good ground, and brought forth fruit, some an hundred-fold, some sixty-fold, some thirty-fold.

9 Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 ¶ And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables?

11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.

12 For [r]whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance:[4] but whosoever hath not, [s]from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

13 Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing, see not; and hearing, they hear not; neither do they understand.

14 And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive:

15 For this people's [x]heart is waxed gross, and their [y]ears are dull of hearing, and [z]their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, [b]and I should heal them.

16 But [c]blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears, for they hear.

17 For verily I say unto you, [d]That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

vation, through love of this world, and enmity to the truth,) were equivalent to it. And in every age many provoke God to leave them to final impenitence: but there must be great opportunity of information, much inward conviction, determinate sinning against the light of a man's own conscience, deliberate enmity to the truth, and an obstinate opposition to it in defiance of evidence, to constitute this kind of impiety. They who most fear having committed it, are generally at the greatest distance from it: while they who are thus given up, are perhaps universally either callous in presumption, or enmity, or absolutely and outrageously desperate, of which we sometimes meet with awful instances: but the trembling contrite sinner has the witness in himself, that neither of these is his case.—Scott.

Jonah and Nineveh.—Ver. 41. In the day of judgment, the repentance of the Ninevites will be mentioned as an aggravation of the sin, and consequently the condemnation of those to whom Christ preached then, and of those to whom Christ is preached now; for this reason, because Christ is greater than Jonah. 1. Jonah was but a man, subject to like passions, to like sinful passions, as we are; but Christ is the Son of God. 2. Jonah was a stranger in Nineveh, he came among the strangers that were prejudiced against his country; but Christ came to his own, when he preached to the Jews, and much more when he is preached among professing Christians, that are called by his name. 3. Jonah preached but one short sermon, and that with no great solemnity, but as he passed along the streets; Christ renews his calls, sat and taught, taught in the synagogues. 4. Jonah preached nothing but wrath and ruin within forty days, gave no instructions, directions, or encouragements, to repent: but Christ, beside the warning given us of our danger, has showed wherein we must repent, and assured us of acceptance upon our repentance, because "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." 5. Jonah wrought no miracle to confirm his doctrine, showed no good-will to the Ninevites; but Christ wrought abundance of miracles, and all miracles of mercy.

Queen of Sheba.—Ver. 42. She came from a far country to hear the wisdom of Solomon; yet people will not be persuaded to come and hear the wisdom of Christ, though he is in every thing greater than Solomon. 1. The queen of Sheba had no invitation to come to Solomon, nor any promise of being welcome; but we are invited to Christ, to sit at his feet and hear his word. 2. Solomon was but a wise man, but Christ is wisdom itself, "in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom." 3. The queen of Sheba had many difficulties to break through; she was a woman unfit for travel, the journey long and perilous; she was a queen, and what would become of her own country in her absence? We have no such cares to hinder us. 4. She could not be sure that it would be worth her while to go so far on this errand; fame uses to flatter men, and perhaps she might have in her own country or court wise men sufficient to instruct her; yet, having heard of Solomon's fame, she would see him; but we come not to Christ upon such uncertainties. 5. "She came from the uttermost parts of the earth," but we have Christ among us and his word nigh us: "Behold he stands at the door, and knocks." 6. It should seem, the wisdom the queen of Sheba came for, was only philosophy and politics: but the wisdom that is to be had with Christ, is wisdom to salvation. 7. She could only hear Solomon's wisdom, he could not give her wisdom: but Christ will give wisdom to those who come to him; nay, he will himself be "made of God to them wisdom."—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. Parable of the Sower.—Ver. 4—23. Now observe the characters of these four sorts of ground. 1. The highway ground. They had pathways through their corn-fields, chap. xii. 1, and the seed that fell on them never entered, and so the birds picked it up. The place where Christ's hearers now stood, represented the characters of most of them, the sand on the sea-shore, which was to the seed like the highway ground. Observe, First, What kind of hearers are compared to "the highway ground;" such as "hear the word and understand it not;" and it is their own fault that they do not. They take no heed to it, take no hold of it; they do not come with any design to get good, as the highway was never intended to be sown. They "come before God as his people come, and sit before him as his people sit;" but it is merely for fashion-sake, to see and be seen; they mind not what is said, it comes in at one ear and goes out at the other, and makes no impression. Secondly, How they come to be unprofitable hearers. The "wicked one," that is, the devil, "cometh and catcheth away that which was sown."—Such mindless, careless, trifling hearers, are an easy prey to Satan; who, as he is the great murderer of souls, so is he the great thief of sermons, and will be sure to rob us of the word, if we take not care to keep it; as the birds pick up the seed that falls on the ground that is neither ploughed before, nor harrowed after. 2. The stony ground. "Some fell upon stony places," which represents the case of hearers that go further than the former, who receive good impressions of the word, but they are not lasting. Note, It is possible we may be a great deal better than some others, and yet not be so good as we should be. Now observe, concerning these hearers that are represented by the stony ground, First, How far they went. (1.) They "hear the word;" they turn neither their backs upon it, nor a deaf ear to it. Note, Hearing the word, though ever so frequently, ever so gravely, if we rest in that, will never bring us to heaven. (2.) They are "quick in hearing," swift to hear, "he anon receiveth it." Note, Hypocrites often get the start of true Christians in the shows of profession, and are often too hot to hold. (3.) They receive it with joy. Note, There are many that are 18 ¶ Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower.

19 When any one heareth [f]the word of the kingdom, [g]and understandeth it not,[g] then cometh [h]the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. [i]This is he which received seed by the way-side.

20 But he that [k]received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and [l]anon[6] with joy receiveth it:

21 Yet hath he not [m]root in himself, but [n]dureth for a while; [o]for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is [p]offended.

22 He also that received [q]seed among the thorns, is he that heareth the word; and [r]the care of this world, and [s]the deceitfulness of riches, [t]choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful.

23 But he [u]that receiveth seed into the [x]good ground is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it; which also [y]beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, [z]some an hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty.

24 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed [a]good seed in his field;

25 But while men slept, his [b]enemy came and sowed [c]tares[7] among the wheat, and went his way.

26 But [d]when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also.

27 So [e]the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from [f]whence then hath it tares?

28 He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up?

29 But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them.

30 Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say [m]to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, [n]and bind them in bundles to burn them: [p]but gather the wheat into my barn.

31 ¶ Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard-seed, which a man took and sowed in his field:

32 Which indeed is the least of all seeds; [8] but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

33 ¶ Another parable spake he unto them; The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three *measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

34 All [y]these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them:

35 That [z]it might be fulfilled[9] which was spoken by the prophet, saying, [a]I will open my mouth in parables; [b]I will utter things which have been kept secret [c]from the foundation of the world.

36 ¶ Then [d]Jesus sent the multitude away, [e]and went into the house; and his disciples came unto him, saying, [f]Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field.

37 He answered and said unto them, [g]He that soweth the good seed [h]is the Son of man;

38 The [i]field is the world; [k]the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are [l]the children of the wicked one;

39 The [m]enemy that sowed them is the devil; [n]the harvest is the end of the world; [o]and the reapers are the angels.

40 As therefore [p]the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world.

41 The Son of man shall send forth his angels, [r]and they shall gather out of his kingdom all [†]things that offend, [s]and them which do iniquity, 42 And shall [t]cast them into a furnace of fire:[10] there shall be [u]wailing and gnashing of teeth.

43 Then [x]shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. [z]Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

44 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

45 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man seeking goodly pearls;[11]

46 Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it.

47 ¶ Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind:

48 Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.[12]

49 So shall it be at the end of the world: [l]the angels shall come forth, [m]and sever the wicked from among the just,

50 And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

51 Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord.

52 Then said he unto them, Therefore every scribe, which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is very glad to hear a good sermon, that yet do not profit by it; they may be pleased with the word, and yet not changed and ruled by it. (4.) They "endure for a while," like a violent motion, which continues as long as the impression of the force remains, but ceases when that has spent itself. Secondly, How they fell away, so that no fruit was brought to perfection; no more than the corn, that having no depth of earth from which to draw moisture, is scorched and withered by the heat of the sun. And the reason is, (1.) They have "no root in themselves," no settled, fixed principles in their judgments, or firm resolutions in their wills, nor any rooted habits in their affections: nothing firm that will be either the sap or the strength of their profession. Note, It is possible there may be the green blade of a profession, where yet there is not the root of grace; hardness prevails in the heart, and what there is of soil and softness is only in the surface. (2.) Times of trial come, and then they come to nothing. "When tribulation and persecution arise because of the word, he is offended;" it is a stumbling-block in his way which he cannot get over, and so he flies off, and this is all his profession comes to. Trials which shake some, confirm others, Phil. i. 12. Observe how soon they fall away, by and by; as soon rotten as they were ripe; a profession taken up without consideration is commonly let fall without it: "light come, light go." 3. The thorny ground. "Some fell among thorns," (which are a good guard to the corn when they are in the hedge, but a bad inmate when they are in the field,) "and the thorns sprung up;" which intimates that they did not appear, or but little, when the corn was sown, but afterwards they proved choking to it. This went further than the former, for it had root. Now what are these choking thorns? First, "The cares of this world." Care for another world would quicken the springing of this seed, but care for this world chokes it. Worldly cares are fitly compared to thorns, for they came in with sin, and are a fruit of the curse: they are good in their place to stop a gap, but a man must be well armed that deals much in them, 2 Sam. xxiii. 6, 7: they are entangling, vexing, scratching, and "their end is to be burned," Heb. vi. 8. These thorns choke the good seed. Note, Worldly cares are great hinderances to our profiting by the word of God, and our proficiency in religion. Secondly, "The deceitfulness of riches." Those who, by their care and industry, have raised estates, and so the danger that arises from care seems to be over, and they "continue hearers of the word," yet are still in a snare. Observe, It is not so much riches, as "the deceitfulness of riches," that does the mischief: now they cannot be said to be deceitful to us unless we put our confidence in them, and raise our expectations from them, and then it is that they choke the good seed. 4. The good ground. "Others fell into good ground," and it is pity but that good seed should always meet with good soil, and then there is no loss; such are "good hearers of the word," The hearers represented by the good ground are, First, Intelligent hearers; they "hear the word and understand it;" they understand not only the sense and meaning of the words, but their own concern in them; they understand it as a man of business understands his business. Secondly, Fruitful hearers, which is an evidence of their good understanding, which "also beareth fruit." Fruit is to every seed its own body, a substantial product in the heart and life, agreeable to the seed of the word received. We then bear fruit, when we practise according to the word; when the temper of our minds and the tenor of our lives are conformable to the gospel we have received, and we do as we are taught. Thirdly, Not all alike fruitful; "some an hundred-fold, some sixty, some thirty." Note, Among fruitful Christians, some are more fruitful than others: where there is true grace, yet there are degrees of it; some are of greater attainments in knowledge and holiness than others; all Christ's scholars are not in the same form. We should aim at the highest degree, to bring "forth an hundred-fold," as Isaac's ground did, Gen. xxiii. 12, "abounding in the work of the Lord," John xv. 8.

PARABLE OF THE TARES AND WHEAT.—Ver. 36—43. After our Lord had spoken the preceding parables, he dismissed the multitude, and retired into a house; where his disciples applied to him to explain the parable of the tares, as that seems most of all to have perplexed them; and he answered, that "the Son of Man," the Messiah, was the sower of the good seed; that is, personally, and by his ministers: and this implied, that he is the lord and proprietor of the field. This represented the world, throughout which the word of God was to be preached under the gospel. The "good seed" (or those converts produced from it,) are the "children of the kingdom," true believers, the royal subjects of Christ, and heirs of heaven: but the produce of the bad seed are the children of the wicked one; heretics, hypocrites, antichristians, antinomians, and enthusiasts of every description. As the parable of the sower represents what is wrong in the visible church, (even where the true gospel is faithfully preached,) through the subtlety of Satan and the depravity of the human heart; so, that of the tares represents the fatal effects of false teachers and doctrine, drawing men off from the truth, or prejudicing them against it. These false and disgraceful characters are the genuine produce of false doctrine and distorted views of Christianity, which "Satan, transformed into an angel of light," by his ministers of various descriptions, propagates in the world; even as true believers are the produce of the real gospel attended by the influence of the Holy Spirit. The devil, the enemy of Christ and of men, sows this seed by his servants, in order to deceive souls and disgrace the gospel; he does it "by night," and privily; he is most successful when least suspected, and when ministers and Christians are most unwatchful. The produce of this corrupt seed is not immediately discovered, but gradually detected.

14 And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, [s]and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick.

15 And when it was evening,[3] his disciples came to him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past; [b]send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals.

16 But Jesus said unto them, [c]They need not depart; give ye them to eat.

17 And they say unto him, [d]We have here but five loaves, and two fishes.

18 He said, Bring them hither to me.

19 And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and, [f]looking up to heaven, [g]he blessed, and brake,[4] and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

20 And they did all eat, and were filled: [i]and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets full.

21 And they that had eaten were [k]about five thousand men, besides women and children.

22 ¶ And straightway [l]Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, [m]while he sent the multitudes away.

23 And when he had sent the multitudes away, [n]he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, [o]he was there alone.

24 But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, [p]tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary.

25 And in [q]the fourth watch[5] of the night Jesus went unto them, [r]walking on the sea.

26 And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear.

27 But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, [t]Be of good cheer: [u]it is I; be not afraid.

28 And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

29 And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, [v]he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.

And though gross transgressors, and such as openly oppose the fundamentals of the gospel, ought to be separated from the society of the faithful, yet many of the children of the kingdom are so defective, and many of the children of the wicked one so plausible; that an exact discrimination cannot be made by human discernment, and by attempting too much, true believers may be rejected, stumbled, or discouraged: much less must separation by persecution be attempted; by which far more of the wheat hath been eradicated, than of the tares, ever since the officious servants, contrary to their Master's express command, have employed that unhallowed means. In general they must be let alone till the harvest. This will be at the end of the world; for, though death will separate them as to their souls, yet the grand and public separation will be at the day of judgment. Then the holy angels will be employed as the reapers in this harvest, by the Son of man, the incarnate Saviour and Judge, whose creatures, worshippers, and servants they are. These will gather together all the wicked in the world; and especially all heretical and hypocritical professors of the gospel, who have caused scandals and wrought iniquity, from every part of the church, in order to their destruction: even as the tares are bound up in bundles to be burned; and they shall be cast into hell, as into a furnace of fire, where will be doleful lamentations and gnashing of teeth in rage and despair. When the tempters and the tempted, the deceivers and the deceived, and those that have associated together, and encouraged each other in delusion and iniquity, shall be consigned to the same punishment, and with desperate enmity shall charge their destruction upon each other; then these tares will, as it were, "be bound in bundles to be burned. But at that time the righteous, the children of the kingdom, will shine forth in the image of Christ, with the lustre of the unclouded noonday sun, in the kingdom of their Father; being made unspeakably glorious, excellent, wise, and happy. —Henry.

CHAP. XIV. HEROD'S FATAL OATH.—Ver. 8—11. Salome retired to consult her mother, how the most advantage might be made of the oath: and, revenge getting the better of all other passions, Herodias persuaded and urged her daughter, (who must have been reluctant to give up all those objects which would be desirable to her youthful mind,) to demand the head of John the Baptist without delay, in a charger, or a large dish! When Herod heard this strange request, he was sorry; probably not so much from desire of preserving John's life, as fear of consequences, checks of conscience, and, as some think, considering the execution as a bad omen on his birth-day. But though he was in some sense sorry that the demand had been made so suddenly and on this occasion, yet, pleading his oath, and his regard for his guests, he commanded his immediate execution. Herod's oath was rash and profane in the extreme; and when it was found to involve such consequences, it became absolutely unlawful to observe it: he ought to have repented of his impiety, and with abhorrence to have rejected Salome's application. Nor was it very honourable to his guests to suppose that they would be offended, if he refused to murder this holy man, through a rash engagement at a banquet in their presence. Had Salome demanded the execution of some esteemed chieftain among them, who had displeased Herodias, they would doubtless have arisen to oppose the demand: but probably John was obnoxious to many of them, as well as to Herodias. Accordingly he was suddenly and speedily dismissed to his eternal rest; and his head, reeking in its blood, was brought as a strange present to Salome, and by her given to her mother, who is reported to have treated it with indignant barbarity. This horrid spectacle could gratify the malevolence even of a female! and, it was customary for the heads of criminals to be thus brought to those who condemned them, in order to certify that they were really put to death. Thus by a mysterious providence, this most eminent man of God was cut off, in the prime of life and fitness for usefulness, to gratify the malice of an incestuous adulteress, to recompense the vain exhibition of a giddy young female, by the orders of a rash, perhaps intoxicated, prince, and to humour the companions of his revels! But they could not long enjoy this impious and cruel triumph. —Scott.

MIRACULOUS BANQUET.—Ver. 14—21. Though the disproportion was so great, yet there was enough and to spare. 1. There was enough: "they did all eat and were filled." Note, Those whom Christ feeds, he fills; so runs the promise, Psal. xxxvii. 19. "They shall be satisfied." As there was enough for all, "they did all eat," so there was enough for each, "they were filled;" though there was but a little, there was enough, and that is as good as a feast. Note, The blessing of God can make a little go a great way; as, if God blasts what we have, "we eat, and have not enough," Hag. i. 9. 2. There was to spare; "they took up of the fragments that remained, twelve baskets full," one basket for each apostle: thus what they gave they had again, and a great deal more with it; and they were so far from being nice, that they could make this broken meat serve another time, and be thankful. This was to manifest and magnify the miracle, and to show that the provision Christ makes for those who are his is not bare and scanty, but rich and plenteous; "bread enough, and to spare," Luke xv. 17, an overflowing fulness. Elisha's multiplying the loaves was somewhat like this, but far short of it; and then it was said, "They shall eat and leave," 2 Kings iv. 43. It is the same divine power, though exerted in an ordinary way, which multiplies "the seed sown in the ground" every year, and makes "the earth yield her increase;" so that what was

God's commandments, and men's traditions, 3. What defileth a man, 11.

THEN came to Jesus scribes and Pharisees, which were of Jerusalem,[1] saying,

2 Why do thy disciples [d]transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread.

3 But he answered and said unto them, [e]Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?

4 For God commanded, saying, [g]Honour thy father and mother: and, [h]He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.

5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, [k]It is a gift,[2] by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me,

6 And [l]honour not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

7 Ye hypocrites, [o]well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying,

8 This people [p]draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips; [q]but their heart is far from me.

9 But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

10 ¶ And he called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear, and understand:

11 Not [x]that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; [y]but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.

12 Then came his disciples, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended, after they heard this saying?

13 But he answered and said, [a]Every plant,[3] which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

14 [b]Let them alone: [c]they be blind leaders of the blind. [d]And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

15 Then answered Peter, and said unto him, [e]Declare unto us this parable.

16 And Jesus said, Are ye also yet without understanding?

17 Do not ye yet understand, [g]that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth goeth into the belly, [h]and is cast out into the draught?

18 But [i]those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man.

19 For [k]out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies:

20 These are the things [m]which defile a man: [n]but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man.

21 ¶ Then Jesus went thence, [o]and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.

22 And, behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, [r]Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou [s]Son of David;[4] [t]my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil.

23 But he answered her not a word. And his disciples came and besought him, saying, [x]Send her away; for she crieth after us.

24 But he answered and said, [y]I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.[5]

25 Then came she and [a]worshipped him, saying, [b]Lord, help me.

26 But he answered and said, [c]It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs.

27 And she said, [d]Truth, Lord: [e]yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.

28 Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, [f]great is thy faith: [g]be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

29 ¶ And Jesus departed from thence, [h]and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee; and went up into a mountain, and sat down there.

30 And great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed,[6] and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet, and he healed them;

31 Insomuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw [m]the dumb to speak, [n]the maimed to be whole, [o]the lame to walk, and the blind to see: [p]and they glorified the God of Israel.

32 ¶ Then [r]Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, [s]I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now [t]three days, [u]and have nothing to eat: and I will not send them away fasting, [x]lest they faint in the way.

33 And his disciples say unto him, [y]Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as [z]to fill so great a multitude?

34 And Jesus saith unto them, [a]How many brought out by handfuls, is brought home in sheaves. "This is the Lord's doing;" it is "by Christ" that all natural things consist, and "by the word of his power" that they are upheld.—Henry.

JESUS WALKING ON THE SEA.—Ver. 25–27. The fourth watch of the night began three hours before sun-rise; and during these three hours, Jesus came to the disciples perhaps after day-break.—"Note, That to walk on the sea is made the property of God, 'who alone spreadeth the heavens,'" Job ix. 8. [Whitby.]—"The picture of two feet walking on the sea was an Egyptian hieroglyphic for an impossible thing." [Doddridge.] It was, no doubt, an attestation, that He was the God of nature, the Lord of the creation; and also an emblem of his power over all the troubles and persecutions which disquiet his church.—The disciples, however, cried out for excess of terror, supposing that what they saw, was either the apparition of some deceased person foreboding evil, or an apostate spirit coming to do them some mischief.—"That the Jews had an opinion of hurtful spirits walking in the night is evident from the Seventy, who render, 'from the pestilence walking in darkness,' from the fear of the devils, that walk in the night." [Whitby.]—To allay their terror, Jesus spake to the disciples with his usual voice, assuring them, that it was he their Lord and friend.

PETER'S BOLDNESS.—Ver. 28—32. Peter from the first appears a man of integrity, who had very exalted thoughts of Christ, and a cordial affection to him; but of a sanguine temper, and not deeply acquainted with his own heart: he was therefore always most forward to speak, to propose, to object, or attempt. When he saw Christ walking on the sea, he found himself excited to a very high confidence, and he desired permission to come to him on the water; probably expecting a commendation of the strength of his faith. But our Lord, to show him his weakness, and to teach all his disciples many useful lessons, bade him come; and Peter without hesitation attempted to walk on the unstable waves! And as long as his faith was fixed upon the divine power of Christ, he was actually enabled to do it; but the boisterousness of the elements soon drew off his attention, and staggered his faith, and then he began to sink: yet still he relied on his Lord for deliverance in this extreme danger; and, in answer to his application Jesus caught him by the hand, and brought him safe to the vessel; at the same time rebuking him, as one of little faith.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. CORBAN.—Ver. 5. When their parents' necessities called for their assistance, they pleaded, that all they could spare from themselves and their children, they had devoted to the treasury of the temple; "It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me," and therefore their parents must expect nothing from them; suggesting withal, that the spiritual advantage of what was so devoted would redound to the parents, who must live upon that air. This, they taught, was a good and valid plea, and many undutiful, unnatural children made use of it, and they justified them in it, and said, "He shall be free;" so we supply the sense. Some go further, and supply it thus: "He doth well, his days shall be long in the land," and he shall be looked upon as having duly observed the fifth commandment. The pretence of religion would make his refusal to provide for his parents not only passable but plausible. But the absurdity and impiety of this tradition were very evident; for revealed religion was intended to improve, not to overthrow, natural religion, one of the fundamental laws of which is this of honouring our parents; and had they known what that meant, "I will have justice, and mercy, and not sacrifice," they had not thus made the most arbitrary rituals destructive of the most necessary morals. This was "making the command of God of no effect." Note, Whatever leads to, or countenances disobedience, does in effect make void the command; and they that take upon them to dispense with God's law do, in Christ's account, repeal and disannul it. To break the law is bad, but to "teach men so," as the scribes and Pharisees did, is much worse, chap. v. 19. To what purpose is the command given, if it be not obeyed? The rule is as to us of none effect, if we be not ruled by it. It is time for thee, Lord, to work, high time for the great Reformer, the great Refiner, to appear; for they have "made void thy law," Ps. cxix. 126; not only sinned "against" the commandment, but, as far as in them lay, sinned "away" the commandment.—Henry.

THE HEART THE SOURCE OF SIN.—Ver. 15–20. Peter, in the name of all the apostles, desired of Christ an explication of the parable which he had spoken; for probably it seemed to them contrary to the Mosaic law, as well as to the traditions of the scribes. And Jesus (having reproved their dulness) proceeded to shew them that their food (if not unlawful or intemperate) could not by any contracted pollution defile them; for it entered not into the heart, and had no effect on the affections of the soul; but it went into the stomach, and all that was unsuitable to nourish the body was carried off by a regular process of nature, without communicating any sinful defilement. But those things which proceed out of the mouth come from the heart: when lies, impiety, blasphemy, or wickedness, were uttered, corrupt nature expressed itself; and this defiled a man in the sight of God. Indeed, from the same corrupt source all kind of wickedness proceeded, such as polluting, malicious, proud, or covetous imaginations, and corrupt, perverse reasonings against God and true religion; and even murders, adulteries, and every species of lewdness, injustice, and impiety. These crimes were, indeed, perpetrated by the body, but they were conceived in the heart, and

The sign of Jonas, 4. The leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees, 5. Christ foresheweth his death, 21.

THE Pharisees also, with the Sadducees, came, and tempting, desired him that he would shew them [d]a sign from heaven.

2 He answered and said unto them, [e]When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather; for the sky is red:

5 ¶ And when his disciples [l]were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, [m]Take heed, and beware of [n]the leaven[2] of [o]the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

7 And [p]they reasoned among themselves, saying, [q]It is because we have taken no bread.

8 Which [r]when Jesus perceived, he said unto them, [s]O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread?

9 Do [t]ye not understand, neither remember [u]the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

10 Neither [x]the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

Its former name was Paneas, but this was changed into Cesarea, by Philip the tetrarch, who repaired and beautified it, in honour of Tiberius Cesar; and, in order to distinguish it from another Cesarea, mentioned frequently in the Acts of the Apostles, lying on the Mediterranean sea, it was called "Cesarea Philippi."—PEARCE.

13 ¶ When Jesus came into the coasts of [b]Cesarea Philippi,[3] he asked his disciples, saying, [c]Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?

14 And they said, Some say that thou art [e]John the Baptist; some, [f]Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

15 He saith unto them, [g]But whom say ye that I am?

16 And Simon Peter answered and said, [h]Thou art the Christ, the Son of [i]the living God.[4]

17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, [l]Simon Bar-jona; [m]for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, [n]but my Father which is in heaven.

18 And I say unto thee, That [o]thou art Peter, and [p]upon this rock [q]I will build [r]my church; [s]and the gates of hell [t]shall not prevail against it.

19 And I will [u]give unto thee, [x]the keys of the kingdom of heaven: [y]and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

20 Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

21 ¶ From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders, and chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, [d]and be raised again the third day.

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, *Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee.

23 But he turned, and said unto Peter, [f]Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offence unto me: for [i]thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.

24 ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.[5]

25 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

26 For [n]what is a man profited, if he shall [o]gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? [p]or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

27 For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

28 Verily I say unto you, [t]There be some standing here which shall not [u]taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

proved its desperate wickedness: this rendered men loathsome and filthy in God's sight; and not eating their meals with unwashen hands. Such things related only to natural decency, and were no part of religion.—Scott.

PRAYER OF THE SYROPHENICIAN WOMAN.—Ver. 22—28. "Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord help me." 1. She continued to pray. What Christ said silenced the disciples; you hear no more of them, they took the answer, but the woman did not. Note, The more sensibly we feel the burthen, the more resolutely we should pray for the removal of it. "And it is the will of God that we should continue instant in prayer, should always pray and not faint." 2. She improved in prayer. Instead of blaming Christ, or charging him with unkindness, she seems rather to suspect herself, and lay the fault upon herself. Note, When the answers of prayer are deferred, God is thereby teaching us to pray more, and pray better. It is then time to inquire wherein we have come short in our former prayers, that what has been amiss may be amended for the future. Disappointments in the success of prayer must be excitements to do the duty of prayer. Christ in his agony "prayed more earnestly." 3. She waves the question, whether she was of those to whom Christ was sent or no; she will not argue that with him, though perhaps she might have claimed some kindred to the house of Israel; but, "Whether an Israelite or no, I come to the Son of David for mercy, and 'I will not let him go, except he bless me." If we cannot reason down our unbelief, let us pray it down. A fervent, affectionate "Lord, help me," will help us over many of the discouragements which are sometimes ready to bear us down and overwhelm us. 4. Her prayer is very short, but comprehensive, and fervent: "Lord, help me." Take this, (1.) As lamenting her case; "If the Messiah be sent only to the house of Israel, the 'Lord help me,' what will become of me and mine." Note, It is not in vain for broken hearts to bemoan themselves; God looks upon them then, Jer. xxxi. 18. Or, (2.) As begging grace to assist her in the hour of temptation. She found it hard to keep up her faith when it was thus frowned upon, and therefore prays, "Lord, help me;" Lord strengthen my faith now; "Lord, let thy right hand uphold me," while my soul is "following hard after thee," Ps. lxiii. 8. Or, (3.) As enforcing her original request; "Lord, help me; Lord, give me what I come for." She believed that Christ could and would help her, though she was not of the house of Israel; else she would have dropt her petition. Still she keeps up good thoughts of Christ, and will not quit her hold. "Lord, help me," is a good prayer, if well put up; and it is pity that it should be turned into a by-word, and that we should take God's name in vain in it.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. THE ROCK.—Ver. 18. Thou art Peter, which signifies a stone, or rock; Christ gave him that name, when he first called him, John i. 42, and here he confirms it; "Peter, thou dost answer thy name, thou art a solid, substantial disciple, fixed and stayed, and one that there is some hold of. From the mention of this significant name, occasion is taken for this metaphor of "building upon a rock." 1. Some by this rock understand Peter himself as an apostle, the chief, though not the prince of the twelve; senior among them, but not superior over them. The church is built upon the foundation of the apostles, Eph. ii. 20. The first stones of that building were laid in and by their ministry; hence their names are said to be "written in the foundations" of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 14. Now Peter being that apostle by whose hand the first stones of the church were laid, both in Jewish converts, Acts ii, and in the Gentile converts, Acts x., he might in some sense be said to be the rock on which it was built. Cephas was one that seemed to be a pillar, Gal. ii. 9. But it sounds very harsh to call a man that only lays the first stone of a building, which is a transient act, the foundation on which it is built, which is an abiding thing. Yet if it were so, this would not serve to support the pretensions of the Bishop of Rome; for Peter had no such headship as he claims, much less could derive it to his successors, least of all to the Bishops of Rome, who, whether they are so in place or no, is a question; but that they are not so in the truth of Christianity, is past all question. 2. Others, by this "rock," understand Christ; "'Thou art Peter,' thou hast the name of a stone, but 'upon this rock,' pointing to himself, 'I build my church.'" Perhaps he laid his hand upon his breast, as when he said, "Destroy this temple," John ii. 19, when he "spake of the temple of his body." Then he took occasion from the temple, where he was, so to speak of himself, and gave occasion to some to misunderstand him of that; so here he took occasion from Peter to speak of himself as the Rock, and gave occasion to some to misunderstand him of Peter. But this must be explained by those many scriptures which speak of Christ as the only Foundation of the church, 1 Cor. iii. 11; 1 Pet. ii. 6. Christ is both its Founder and its Foundation; he draws souls, and draws them to himself; to him they are united, and on him they rest and have a constant dependence. 3. Others by this "rock" understand this confession which Peter made of Christ, and this comes all to one with understanding it of Christ himself. It was a good confession which Peter witnessed, "Thou art Christ the Son of the living God;" the rest concurred with him in it. "Now," saith Christ, "this is that great truth 'upon which I will build my church.'" (1.) Take away this truth itself, and the universal church falls to the ground. If Christ be not the Son of God, Christianity is a cheat, and the church is a mere chimera; "our preaching is vain, your faith is vain, and you are yet in your sins," 1 Cor. xv. 14—17. If Jesus be not the Christ, these that own him are not of the church, but deceivers and deceived. (2.)

CHAP. XVII.

The transfiguration of Christ, 1. He healeth a lunatic, 14; foretelleth his own passion, 22. He payeth tribute, 24.

AND after six days Jesus taketh [a]Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain[1] apart,

2 And was [d]transfigured before them: and [e]his face did shine as the sun, and his [f]raiment was white as the light.

3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.

4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles;[2] one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

5 While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, [g]This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.

6 And when the disciples heard it, [h]they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7 And Jesus came and [i]touched them, and said, [k]Arise, and be not afraid.

8 And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead.

10 ¶ And his disciples asked him saying, [l]Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?

11 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, [a]and restore all things.

12 But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed: likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them.

13 Then [e]the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

14 ¶ And [f]when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man, [g]kneeling down[3] to him, and saying,

15 Lord, [h]have mercy on my son; [i]for he is lunatic, and sore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.

16 And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him.

17 Then Jesus answered and said, [m]O faithless and perverse generation,[4] [n]how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? Bring him hither to me.

18 And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him; and the child was cured from that very hour.

19 Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out?

20 And Jesus said unto them, Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, [o]If ye have faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

21 Howbeit [x]this kind goeth not out [y]but by prayer and fasting.

22 ¶ And while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be [a]betrayed into the hands of men;

23 And [b]they shall kill him, and [c]the third day he shall be raised again. And they were exceeding sorry.

24 ¶ And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute-money came to Peter, and said, Doth not your Master pay tribute?

25 He saith, Yes. And when he was come into the house, Jesus prevented him, saying, What thinkest thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?

26 Peter saith unto him, Of strangers. Jesus saith unto him, Then are the children free.[5]

27 Notwithstanding, lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find [t]a piece of money; that take, and give unto them for me and thee.

CHAP. XVIII.

Christ teacheth to be humble, 1. Touching offences, 7, and forgiving one another, 21.

AT the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest [a]in the kingdom of heaven?

2 And Jesus called [d]a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,

3 And said, [e]Verily I say unto you, [f]Except ye be converted, [g]and become as little children, ye shall not [h]enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4 Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

5 And whoso shall [l]receive one such little child in my name [m]receiveth me.

6 But whoso shall [n]offend one of these [o]little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone[1] were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

7 ¶ Woe unto the world because of offences! [q]for it must needs be that offences come; [r]but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!

8 Wherefore [s]if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life

Take away the faith and confession of this truth from any particular church, and it ceases to be a part of Christ's church, and relapses to the state and character of infidelity.—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. THE TRANSFIGURATION.—Ver. 2. The Light of the world shone forth from behind those clouds that commonly obscured his splendour. The fashion of his countenance was altered, and did shine like the sun: and his very raiment became white as snow, so as no fuller on earth could whiten it; yea, white as the light, and resplendent as lightning! This appearance of Christ as man would give the apostles some apprehension of the divine glory which he had with the Father before his incarnation, and which was always inherent in him, though he saw good to veil it under external meanness. It would serve to interpret to them the meaning of their own confession, "Thou art the Son of the living God," it was intended to support their faith at that approaching season when they would witness his crucifixion; and it would give them an idea of his heavenly glory after his ascension; and of the glory prepared for them also, when changed by his power to be like him, even in respect of his glorified body. Ver. 3. In addition to the personal glory which our Lord at this time manifested, there appeared Moses and Elijah conversing with him, on the subject of the painful and ignominious death, which he was shortly to suffer at Jerusalem. The apostles, hearing at least part of this conversation, probably understood from it, that the persons whom they saw were Moses and Elijah. Elijah was taken up alive into heaven, and doubtless appeared in his glorified body; but whether the body of Moses was raised for this purpose, or how he came, are no proper subjects of inquiry. This was suited to give the apostles a realizing apprehension of the invisible world, and of the present felicity of departed believers, to which they would immediately be admitted, if faithful to death. These two eminent persons attended on Jesus as servants on their Lord, coming, as it were, on purpose to do him homage; glorious indeed, but with glory far beneath His, as the planets are less resplendent than the noonday sun, from whom they derive their lustre, and by whose beams they are eclipsed. Moses was the great lawgiver of Israel, and Elijah the chief of the prophets: but they both came, as it were, to lay down their commissions and their honours, at the Redeemer's feet; in whose person, and obedience unto death, the moral law was magnified, the ceremonial types were fulfilled, the prophecies were accomplished, and the end of all preceding dispensations answered. Thus Moses and Elijah bare witness to the apostles, that Jesus was their Lord also; and that, by his coming, the time of the law and the prophets was terminated, and that of the gospel introduced. Ver. 4. With this glorious scene before their eyes, the apostles were heavy with sleep, [illegible] overpowered by the splendour, or drowsy through weariness; but when they were awaked, Peter, delighted and surprised to see his beloved Master appear in glory and receive such honour, instead of hearkening to the discourse, broke out into an exclamation, that, "it was most pleasant and desirable for them to continue there," and not to go down any more to meet those sufferings of which he was so reluctant to hear. Ver. 5—8. Whilst Peter was speaking, "a bright cloud overshadowed them;" an emblem of the divine presence and glory, but so veiled as to suit their mortal state: yet it was not like the tremendous display from mount Sinai at the giving of the law, nor of the thick darkness by which the Lord took possession of the temple; but a bright cloud, denoting the introduction of a clearer and more encouraging discovery of the divine glory by the gospel. From this cloud a voice was distinctly heard, which coincided with the testimony borne to Christ at his baptism.—Scott.

THE LUNATIC BOY.—See Mark ix. 17.

THE PIECE OF MONEY.—Ver. 27. The piece of money was just enough to pay the tax for Christ and Peter. Thou shalt find a stater, the value of a Jewish shekel, which would pay the poll-tax for two, for it was half-a-shekel, Exod. xxx. 13. Christ could as easily have commanded a bag of money as a piece of money; but he would teach us not to covet superfluities, but having enough for our present occasions, therewith to be content, and not to distrust God, though we live but from hand to mouth. Christ made the fish his cash-keeper; and why may not we make God's providence our storehouse and treasury? If we have a competency for to-day, "let to-morrow take thought for the things of itself." Christ paid for himself and Peter, because it is probable that here he only was assessed, and of him it was at this time demanded; perhaps the rest had paid already, or were to pay elsewhere. Peter fished for his money, and therefore part of it went for his use. Those that are "workers together with Christ" in winning souls, shall be sharers with him in his glory, and shall shine with him. "Give it for thee and me." What Christ paid for himself, was looked upon as a debt; what he paid for Peter, was a courtesy to him."—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. LITTLE CHILDREN.—Ver. 2. You must "become as little children." Note, Converting grace makes us like little children, not foolish as children, 1 Cor. xiv. 20, nor fickle, Eph. iv. 14, nor playful, chap. xi. 16; but "as children, we must desire the sincere milk of the word," 1 Pet. ii. 2; as children, we must be careful for nothing, but leave it to our heavenly Father to care for us, chap. vi. 31; we must, as children, be harmless and inoffensive, and void of malice, 1 Cor. xiv. 20, governable, and under command, Gal. iv. 2; and (which is here chiefly intended) we must be humble as little children, who do not [illegible] the punctilios of honour; the child of a halt or [u]maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet, to be cast into [x]everlasting fire.

9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, [y]rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell-fire.

10 ¶ Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

11 For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.

12 How think ye? [z]If a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth [a]into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?

13 And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, [b]he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray?

14 Even so [c]it is not the will of [k]your Father which is in heaven, that [l]one of these little ones should perish.

15 ¶ Moreover [m]if thy brother shall trespass against thee, [n]go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, [p]that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

17 And if he shall neglect to hear them, [q]tell it unto the church: [2] but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican.

18 Verily I say unto you, [u]Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

19 Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, [y]it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

20 For where [z]two or three are gathered together in my name, [a]there am I in the midst of them.

21 ¶ Then came Peter to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? [b]till seven times?

22 Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times; but, Until seventy times seven.[3]

23 ¶ Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants.

24 And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him which owed him ten thousand *talents:

25 But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord [b]commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children,[4] and all that he had, and payment to be made.

26 The servant therefore fell down, and †worshipped him, saying, Lord, [l]have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

27 Then the lord of that servant was [k]moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

28 But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow-servants, which owed him an hundred ‡pence; and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest.

29 And his fellow-servant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, [m]Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

30 And he would not; [n]but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

31 So when his fellow-servants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done.

32 Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me:

33 Shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellow-servant, [r]even as I had pity on thee?

34 And his lord was wroth, [s]and delivered him to the tormentors,[5] till he should pay all that was due unto him.

35 So likewise shall my heavenly Father [t]do also unto you, if ye [u]from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

gentleman will play with the child of a beggar, Rom. xii. 16; the child in rags, if it have the breast, is well enough pleased with, and envies not the gaiety of the child in silk little children have no great aims at great places, or projects to raise themselves in the world; they "exercise not themselves in things too high for them;" and we should in like manner "behave, and quiet ourselves," Ps. cxxxi. 1, 2. As children are little in body and low in stature, so we must be little and low in spirit, and in our thoughts of ourselves. This is a temper which leads to other good dispositions; the age of childhood is the learning age.

Their Angels.—Ver. 10. God's angels are theirs; for all his is ours, if we be Christ's, 1 Cor. iii. 22. They are theirs; for they have a charge concerning them to minister for their good, Heb. i. 14, to pitch their tents about them, and bear them up in their arms. Some have imagined that every particular saint has a guardian angel; but why should we suppose that, when we are sure that every particular saint, when there is occasion, has a guard of angels! This is particularly applied here to the little ones, because they are most despised and most exposed. They have but little that they can call their own, but they can look by faith on the heavenly hosts, and call them theirs. While the great ones of the world have honourable men for their retinue and guards, the little ones of the church are attended with glorious angels; which bespeaks not only their dignity, but the danger those run themselves upon, who despise and abuse them. It is bad being enemies to those who are so guarded; and it is good having God for our God, for then we have his angels for our angels.—Henry.

Offences.—Ver. 15—17. Contentions amongst Christians tend exceedingly to set the world against the gospel: and as they must arise, in this present state, among persons who are sanctified only in part, and who are liable both to give cause for anger, and to be angry without cause themselves; so our Lord next prescribed some rules for stopping the progress, and preventing the consequences, of them, which could seldom fail of being effectual, if honestly followed. In case a man should be injured by a brother, a professed Christian, he ought not to go and complain of it to others, (as it is commonly done perhaps upon rumour;) to inflame his own resentment, and wound his neighbour's reputation; but he ought to go privately, and in a gentle, yet plain and convincing manner, to state the matter, and show him the injustice and unreasonableness of his conduct. If this produces a proper effect, (as it generally will with a true Christian,) and he sees and acknowledges his fault, then the offending brother is won over; and, instead of an open breach, a cordial reconciliation takes place, and love is continued and increased. But if this private application fails of success, and the offender persists in his injury, and refuses reasonable terms of agreement; the offended party is next ordered to take with him one or two other Christian friends, who may hear and bear witness to the facts that are alleged, and the terms of accommodation which are proposed: that they may be reported to the church on more unexceptionable testimony: and if these witnesses determine the person to be faulty, and approve of the concessions required, and he refuses to hearken to them, and persists in his injury; it will then be necessary to declare the matter more openly, not to the world, but to the church, (i. e. the teachers and professors of the gospel;) that the injurious party may be solemnly censured and reproved by them. And if he still refuses to submit, he ought thenceforth to be considered as a heathen or publican; and should be shunned by all pious Christians, that he may be ashamed, and excluded from their communion till he gives tokens of repentance. It would be absurd to restrict these rules to any particular form of church-government and discipline; yet they certainly suppose the existence of government and discipline among Christians, and the exclusion of disorderly persons from those societies to which they immediately belong: and they are capable of being reduced to practice under different forms of church-government; though they are in a great measure neglected by all.

Forgiveness of Offences.—Ver. 23—35. Our Lord frequently addressed men according to what they thought of themselves, and not according to their real character. The servant, in this parable, bears no one mark of a humble penitent; and none but humble penitents are true believers, or really pardoned; though many others think themselves so.—The general tenour of Scripture excludes the supposition, that God actually forgives men, and then afterwards imputes guilt to them to their final condemnation. But men will at last be dealt with, not according to their confidence, but according as their conduct towards their offending brethren has evidenced the reality of their faith and love, or the contrary. This is our Lord's own inference from it; whatever men's profession may be, God will deliver them as wicked servants to the tormentors, to be punished according to their sins with exact justice; if they do not from their hearts, which he especially regards, forgive their brethren their trespasses. No doubt, if true believers are betrayed into any degree of this unchristian spirit, they will experience frowns, rebukes, and chastenings: but to suppose that a real Christian can be of this revengeful temper, directly militates against the design of the parable, and of the whole Scripture; and is calculated to encourage selfish, malignant, and hard-hearted professors of evangelical doctrine, who are the scandal of the gospel, and are as unlike Christ, as the vilest libertine or drunkard in the world.—Scott.

the hardness of your hearts, suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

9 And I say unto you, [q]Whosoever shall put away his wife, [r]except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery.

10 His disciples say unto him, [s]If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

11 But he said unto them, [t]All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

12 For there are some eunuchs,[2] which were so born from their mothers' womb; and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men; and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

13 ¶ Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.

14 But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.[3]

15 And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.

16 And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have [u]eternal life?

17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

18 He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, [v]Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, 19 [w]Honour thy father and thy mother: and, [x]Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

20 The young man saith unto him, [y]All these things have I kept from my youth up: [z]what lack I yet?

21 Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and [a]come and follow me.

22 But when the young man heard that saying, [b]he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24 And again I say unto you, [c]It is easier for a camel to go through[4] the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25 When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, [d]Who then can be saved?

26 But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible; [e]but with God all things are possible.

27 ¶ Then answered Peter, and said unto him, Behold, [f]we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?

28 And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me [g]in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, [h]ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging [i]the twelve tribes of Israel.

29 And every one that [k]hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold, and shall inherit everlasting life.

30 But [l]many that are first shall be last,[5] and the last shall be first.

Of the labourers in the vineyard, 1. Christ teacheth his disciples to be lowly, 20.

FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire [m]labourers into his vineyard.

2 And when he had agreed with the labourers for [n]a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard.

3 And he went out about [o]the third hour,[1] and saw others [p]standing idle in the marketplace,

4 And said unto them, [q]Go ye also into the vineyard, [r]and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the [s]sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise.

6 And about [t]the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle?

7 They say unto him, [u]Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, [v]Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

8 So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

9 And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, [w]they received every man a penny.

10 But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny.

11 And when they had received it, they murmured[2] against the goodman of the house, go not as thou wouldst have her, cut her off from thy flesh, give her a bill of divorce, and let her go, Ecclesias. xxv. 26. Josephus saith, The law runs thus, He that would be disjoined from his wife, for any cause whatsoever, as many such causes there are, let him give her a bill of divorce. And he confesseth, that he himself put away his wife, after she had born him three children, because he was not pleased with her behaviour. But the school of Shammah determined on the contrary, that the wife was only to be put away for adultery." [Whitby.]—These Pharisees had probably heard that Jesus opposed their decisions concerning divorces; and they were desirous of drawing something from him, which they could represent as contrary to the law of Moses. With this insidious design, they questioned him, "Whether it were lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?" That is, on account of any thing in her temper or person, or for any infirmity, which rendered her disagreeable. To this he replied, by referring to the history of the creation, and the original institution of marriage. Intimating, that this was the standard by which such transactions ought to be regulated, as every deviation was an abuse consequent on man's depravity. The Creator first formed Adam, and from his side took the rib whence the woman was made: from this one man and one woman the whole human species descended: and when the Lord brought the woman, Adam acknowledged her as a part of himself; and it was added, (either by Adam as immediately inspired, or by Moses,) that "for this cause," in all future ages, "a man should leave father and mother," foregoing many of the comforts, and relinquishing many of the duties, of these endeared relations, and cleave to his wife, as a part of himself. Thus these two would constitute, as it were, one body, never more to be separated, except by God himself, who in this appointment of marriage hath joined them together; but to have ever after the same interests, and to share each others comforts or sorrows, even as the members of the same body do.—When marriage was instituted, sin and death had not entered: the sinful cause of separation afterwards mentioned, and the natural dissolution of the union, were therefore not referred to: but they have since been specified, and resemble the cutting off of a mortified limb, and the separation of the parts of the body by death. In all other respects the union is to be considered as indissoluble.

THE YOUNG MAN.—Ver. 16—22. Our Lord, to discover to him and others the evil that lurked under these plausible appearances, told him that he yet lacked one thing; and that, if he would be perfect, he must go and sell his estate, distribute the money among the poor, and come and follow him; and then he should have a better treasure in heaven. This was acting like a skilful physician, who was aware of the patient's disorder, and intended to apply the medicine directly to it. It served at once to prove him far distant from the righteousness of the law, and from the temper required by the gospel. Not to mention the supreme love of God, had he loved his neighbour as himself, and believed Jesus to speak by divine authority; he would readily have disposed of his wealth, at his command, in relieving the afflicted, when at the same time it would have ensured his own felicity: and had he been a humble sinner, earnestly seeking mercy and eternal life, as the gift of God through the divine Saviour, he would readily have left all, to have followed him: but the event proved, that his wealth was dearer to him than either God or his neighbour; than Christ, a heavenly treasure, or even his own soul. Doubtless it was his duty to yield a prompt obedience to this command: yet our Lord knew that he would not, and it is evident he intended it as a touchstone by which to discover him to himself. For when he heard that saying, all his pleasing prospects at once vanished, and he departed sorrowful, for he had great possessions.—Scott

CHAP. XX. PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD.—Ver. 1—16. This parable was intended to illustrate the equity of the Lord's dealings, even when "the first are placed last, and the last first," chap. xix. 30. "In this respect" the kingdom of heaven resembles a householder, when he hires labourers to work in his vineyard. He goes very early in the morning, according to the custom, to hire labourers; and bargaining with certain persons at the usual price of a denarius a day, (about seven-pence halfpenny;) he sends them immediately to work. But he goes afterwards also, about nine o'clock, about noon, about three in the afternoon, and at an hour before sun-set; and finds persons unemployed, whom he sends into his vineyard, with a general assurance that he would give them whatever was right or equitable. When even is come, he gives order to his steward to pay the labourers; and as they, who were sent to the work at the latest hour, were called first, and received a full day's pay; the others, especially they who had gone to work early in the morning, expect to receive more; and being disappointed, they murmur, as if injustice were done them: but the master vindicates himself: showing, that they were not injured by his rewarding the others above their deserts; that they had their whole due, whilst the others had more than theirs; that it was reasonable for him to dispose of his own property and manage his own concerns as he saw good; that their objections arose from envy and selfishness, excited by his goodness; and that he certainly should continue his bounty to the others, notwithstanding their murmurs and complaints. And then our Lord assured the disciples, that "the last should be first, and the first last;" for "many be called, but few chosen."—In interpreting the parable, the grand scope ought principally to be adverted to. unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, [a]I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

14 Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last even as unto thee.

15 Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? [d]Is thine eye evil, [e]because I am good?

16 So [f]the last shall be first, and the first last: [g]for many be called, but few chosen.

17 ¶ And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,

18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; [k]and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes, and [l]they shall condemn him to death,

19 And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: [o]and the third day he shall rise again.

20 ¶ Then [q]came to him [r]the mother[3] of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him.

21 And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, [x]the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom.

22 But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of [a]the cup[4] that I shall drink of, and to be [b]baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able.

23 And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

24 And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.

25 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them.

26 But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister;

27 And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant:

28 Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, [o]and to give his life a ransom [p]for many.[5]

29 ¶ And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him.

30 And, behold, two blind men sitting by the way-side, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.

Christ rideth into Jerusalem upon an ass, 1; and driveth the buyers and sellers out of the temple, 12.

AND when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage,[1] unto [b]the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass[2] tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, [d]The Lord hath need of them; [e]and straightway he will send them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

5 Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, [f]thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and [l]sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

6 And the disciples went, [m]and did as Jesus commanded them,

7 And [n]brought the ass and the colt, and [o]put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; [p]others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna[3] to the Son of David: blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest!

10 And when he was come into Jerusalem, [t]all the city was moved, saying, [u]Who is this?

11 And the multitude said, [x]This is Jesus the prophet [y]of Nazareth of Galilee.

12 ¶ And Jesus [z]went into the temple of God, [a]and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the [b]money-changers, and the seats of them that sold [c]doves, yard, the employment of their servants and their wages, with other particulars, are only circumstances: the main scope of the parable respects the dealings of God with men according to the gospel, and vindicates him from the charge of injustice and partiality. —"As some careful householder, that has hired labourers, at a set rate, into his vineyard; calling in other workmen at the latter end of the day, is pleased to give an equal retribution to those that came latest into the vineyard, with those that came at first; making good his promise and agreement with the first, while he is bountiful unto the latter; cannot be challenged to have done any wrong to the first in his liberality to the last: even so, God, the great master of this earthly family, having called some more early to the service and profession of his name, some later, if he shall give a like gracious remuneration to all, cannot justly be excepted against; since, if some have cause to magnify his bounty, yet no man has cause to complain." [Bp. Hall.] Some expositors refer the different hours of the day, to several periods in the history of Israel; and others, to the time when the Jews, and afterwards the Gentiles, were brought into the Christian church; but it is very difficult to make the circumstances accord to these events. With more plausibility they may be applied to the conversion of sinners, at the earlier and later stages of human life: for thus indeed one man serves the Lord longer than another. Yet this must not be strained too far: for it would be absurd to suppose, that any real Christians, at the great day of account, will murmur at the appointments of the Judge, or boast of their own services. It is, therefore, rather a description of the state of the visible church, and an illustration of the maxim, "the last shall be first, and the first last," in all its references. The Lord punishes none above their deserts; and recompenses, one way or other, every service that is peformed for him; he does no injustice to any, by showing extraordinary grace to some; and he will, at the close of the day, if not before, convince all the world of his own equity, truth, and goodness, and of the pride, ignorance, and selfishness of these murmurers. He will prove his right to do what he will with his own, to the full satisfaction of his friends, and the final confusion of every one, whose "eye is evil because he is good." He will fulfil his largest promises to each believer, in whatever period of the church, or in whatever time of his life, he becomes a labourer in the vineyard; and he will show, that in real grace, as well as in privilege and consolation, many that are latest converted, exceed those who have been longer in the service of Christ. But the concluding sentence evidently shows, that professors of religion in general were especially intended, and that they were addressed according to "their own opinion of themselves," and not according to the "real state of their souls."

MOTHER OF ZEBEDEE'S CHILDREN.—Ver 20—23. Perhaps Zebedee, the father of James and John, was dead before this time, or he was not so constant a follower of Christ as his wife was; so that she is mentioned as "the mother of Zebedee's children." At their desire, in their name, and with them, she prostrated herself before Christ, and besought him to grant her one request; seeming to expect, that he would engage his word before the petition was made. And when required to propose it, she asked that her two sons might have the chief places of honour and authority in his kingdom. Our Lord had been discoursing of his sufferings, death and resurrection; but the apostles were too prejudiced in that particular to understand his meaning. They were, however, continually expecting that he would appear in his glory; and probably Salome had respect to the twelve thrones which he had promised to the apostles; the two principal of which she wished to engage for her sons; being emboldened to make such a request, by the special favour which our Lord had shown to them. But Jesus told her and them, that they knew not the nature or consequences of their request: for, the chief preferments which he had to bestow, would expose those who obtained them, to the largest share of suffering. He therefore demanded, whether they were able to drink of his cup, and to be baptized with his baptism.—Scott.

BLIND MEN.—See Mark x. 46—52.

CHAP XXI. CHRIST'S TRIUMPHAL PROCESSION INTO JERUSALEM.—Ver. 8—11. When our Lord's intentions of entering Jerusalem in this humble kind of triumph became known; the multitudes that attended him, (being doubtless increased by continual accessions,) began to spread the way on which he was to pass, with their garments, and to strew on each side green branches cut from the trees, or to carry palms in their hands, as was usually done at the feast of tabernacles. Thus they showed their joy, and attempted to honour him, by such methods as were used upon the accession of kings to the throne, or on the triumphal return of victors to their capital cities. It was owing in great measure to the miracle of Lazarus's resurrection, which took place not long before, that the people came thus to meet Christ, and welcome him to Jerusalem: and he was pleased to accede to it, both as an open avowal of his character, and in order to accelerate his crucifixion, now that his time was come. The multitudes on this occasion acknowledged him as the Messiah, who was come in the name of Jehovah, to assume the kingdom over Israel: and with loud acclamations they cried Hosanna to the Son of David. "Hosanna," signifies, "Save I pray," and may be deemed nearly equivalent to "God save the king." They wished prosperity and blessings on him and on his kingdom, with "peace in heaven, and glory in the highest;" either the peculiar favour and friendship of heaven, to render his kingdom glorious above all other kingdoms; or, that God might through him be at peace with Israel, and be glorified with the most exalted praises of 14 And [s]the blind and the lame came to him in the temple; and he healed them.

15 ¶ And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, [t]Hosanna to the Son of David; [k]they were sore displeased,

16 And said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, [u]Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise.

17 And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany; and he lodged there.

18 Now in the morning, as he returned into the city, he hungered.

19 And when he saw *a fig-tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon,[5] but leaves only, and said unto it, [t]Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And presently the fig-tree withered away.

20 And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, [u]How soon is the fig-tree withered away!

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, Verily I say unto you, If ye have faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree, but also if ye shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; it shall be done.

22 And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive.

23 ¶ And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people[6] came unto him as he was teaching, and said, [b]By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

24 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things.

25 The [d]baptism of John, whence was it?[7] from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, [e]Why did ye not then believe him?

26 But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people: [g]for all hold John as a prophet.

27 And they answered Jesus, and said, We cannot tell. And he said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

28 ¶ But [i]what think ye? [k]A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, [l]Son, go work to-day in my vineyard.

29 He answered and said, [m]I will not; but afterward [n]he repented, and went.

30 And he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, [o]I go, sir; and went not.

31 Whether of them twain [p]did the will of his father? They say unto him, [q]The first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

32 For John [t]came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him: and ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

33 Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it,[8] and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country:

34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it.

35 And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another.

36 Again, he sent other servants more than the first; and they did unto them likewise.

37 But [r]last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, [s]They will reverence my son.

38 But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, [h]This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.

39 And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, [l]and slew him.

40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?

41 They say unto him, [n]He will miserably destroy those wicked men,[9] and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

42 Jesus saith unto them, [p]Did ye never read in the scriptures, [q]The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

43 Therefore say I unto you, [t]The kingdom of God shall be taken from you,[10] and given to [u]a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

44 And [w]whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken: [x]but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

45 And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, [y]they perceived that he spake of them.

46 But when they sought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, because they took him for a prophet.

AND Jesus answered, [a]and spake unto them again by parables, and said; men and angels. Some of the multitude might use one expression, and some another; but all meaning the same for substance; namely, to welcome him as the promised Messiah, and to wish peace and prosperity to his kingdom, chap. xxiii. 39. Part of them were true disciples; numbers might be favourably disposed, and act under an immediate impulse; and many might scarcely advert to the meaning of their own words, only joining with the rest, as it is customary on such occasions. No wonder, therefore, that when his disciples and favourers were intimidated, and retired, and persons of another character came to head the multitude; they as loudly cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him." They were, perhaps, disappointed as to their expectations of a temporal kingdom immediately to be set up: and they might be willing to atone with their rulers for their former offence, by joining them against Jesus. For it gave the latter great umbrage to see the city in such commotion, and every body inquiring who this was, and ready to receive Jesus of Nazareth as a prophet, and as their promised Messiah—Scott.

THE MERCHANDISE IN THE TEMPLE.—Ver. 12. The abuse was, buying and selling, and changing money, in the temple. Note, Lawful things, ill timed and ill placed, may become sinful things. That which was decent enough in another place, and not only lawful, but laudable, on another day, "defiles the sanctuary," and "profanes the Sabbath." This buying and selling, and changing money, though secular employments, yet had the pretence of being in ordine ad spiritualia—for spiritual purposes. They sold beasts for sacrifice, for the convenience of those that could more easily bring their money with them than their beasts; and they changed money for those that wanted the half shekel, which was their yearly poll, or redemption-money; or, upon the bills of return; so that this might pass for the outward business of the house of God; and yet Christ will not allow of it. Note, Great corruptions and abuses come into the church by the practices of those whose "gain is godliness;" that is, who make worldly gain the end of their godliness, and counterfeit godliness as their way to worldly gain, 1 Tim. vi. 5; "from such turn away."

THE FIG-TREE CURSED.—1. This cursing of the barren fig-tree, represents the state of hypocrites in general; and so it teaches us, (1.) That the fruit of fig-trees may justly be expected from those that have the leaves. Christ looks for the power of religion from those that make a profession of it; the favour of it from those that have the show of it. [illegible] planted in a fruitful hill: he hungers after it, his [illegible] just expectations from flourishing profession [illegible] to many, seeking fruit, and finds [illegible] and are not alive [illegible] (2.) The sin of barrenness is justly punished with the curse and plague of barrenness; "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever." (4.) A false and hypocritical profession commonly withers in this world, and it is the effect of Christ's curse; the fig-tree that had no fruit, soon lost its leaves. Hypocrites may look plausible for a time, but having no principle, "no root in themselves," their profession will soon come to nothing. 2. It represents the state of the nation and people of the Jews in particular; they were a fig-tree planted in Christ's way, as a church. Now, observe, (1.) The disappointment they gave to our Lord Jesus. He came among them, expecting to find some fruit, something that would be pleasing to him; he hungered after it; not that he "desired a gift," he needed it not, "but fruit that might abound to a good account;" but his expectations were frustrated, he found nothing but leaves; they called "Abraham their father, but did not do the works of Abraham;" they professed themselves expectants of the promised Messiah, but, when he came, they did not receive and entertain him. (2.) The doom he passed upon them, "that never any fruit should grow upon them," or be gathered from them, as a church or as a people, "from henceforward for ever." Never any good came from them, (except the particular persons among them that believed,) after they rejected Christ; they became worse and worse: blindness and hardness happened to them, and grew upon them, till they were unchurched, unpeopled, and undone, and their place and nation rooted up.—Henry.

THE TWO SONS.—Ver. 28—32. The chief pretenders to religion, and apparent supporters of it, among the Jews, were more inveterate enemies to the truth than the vilest profligates in the nation. This Jesus showed in a parable. The father of these two sons represents God as the creator and benefactor of all men, and as the special friend of the Jewish nation. The first of the two sons represented the profligate and openly wicked Jews, who were at length brought to repentance, and became Christ's disciples: and the second son represented the priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, who had a form of godliness, but proved the greatest enemies to the gospel. Our Lord, therefore, asked their opinion of these two sons, which of them did the will of their father? And what they could not but acknowledge, that the latter was the more obedient of the two; he means the publicans and harlots, whom they despised, and [illegible] enter into his kingdom before them.—Scott.

CHAP. XXII.

2 The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son,

3 And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come.

4 Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden,[1] Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready; come unto the marriage.

5 But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise:

6 And the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them.

7 But when the king heard thereof, [n]he was wroth: and he sent forth [o]his armies,[2] and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.

8 Then saith he to his servants, [p]The wedding is ready, [q]but they which were bidden were not worthy.

9 Go [r]ye therefore into the highways, and, as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10 So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, [s]both bad and good: [t]and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11 ¶ And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man [x]which had not on a wedding-garment:[3]

12 And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? And he was speechless.

13 Then said the king to the servants, [b]Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into [c]outer darkness; [d]there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

14 For [e]many are called, but few are chosen.

15 ¶ Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk.

16 And they sent out unto him their disciples with the Herodians,[4] saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man; for thou regardest not the person of men.

17 Tell us therefore, [n]What thinkest thou? [o]Is it lawful to give tribute unto [p]Cæsar, or not?

18 But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?

19 Shew me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a penny.

20 And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription?

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

23 ¶ The same day came to him [x]the Sadducees, which say that there is no resurrection, and asked him,

24 Saying, Master, Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

25 Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother:

26 Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the †seventh.

27 And last of all the woman died also.

28 Therefore, in the resurrection, whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.

30 For [s]in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are [h]as the angels of God in heaven.

31 But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying,

32 I am the God of Abraham,[6] and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? [i]God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

33 And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at his doctrine.

34 ¶ But when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35 Then one of them, which was a lawyer,[7] asked him a question, tempting him, and saying, 36 Master, [r]which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him, [s]Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

39 And the second is like unto it, [t]Thou shalt love thy [u]neighbour as thyself.

40 On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

41 ¶ While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them,

42 Saying, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The Son of David.

43 He saith unto them, How then doth David in Spirit[8] call him Lord, saying, the king's son. John Baptist, the apostles, and seventy disciples, who first announced the arrival of the promised Messiah, were the servants that went to call to the feast those who had been bidden long before, even the Jews who expected the coming of the Messiah, to save and bless them: yet they would not come to him when he appeared, being prejudiced against his holy doctrine and lowly character. The other servants, sent with the second invitation, when all things were ready, seem to mean the apostles and preachers of the gospel, after Christ's ascension into heaven; who showed to the Jews first, the nature of the gospel, and the preparation made for it. But the persons thus favoured having no value for the king or his son, or desire for the feast, or gratitude for the special honour shown them; treated these urgent and repeated invitations with supercilious contempt; making light of them, and going to their different employments and interests. And, as the servants may be supposed to have remonstrated with the remnant on the impropriety and criminality of their conduct; they were enraged, and showed their enmity against the king, by abusing, wounding, or killing them. This represents the final rejection of Christ and the gospel by the Jewish nation; and the contempt and cruelty with which they treated the apostles and other ministers of Christ, with the vile motives and extreme wickedness of their conduct. When the king heard this, he resolved to send them no more invitations; but in due time he made war upon them, destroyed the murderers, and burned their city; thus the Lord sent the Roman armies to execute vengeance on the Jewish nation, and to desolate Jerusalem, for their obstinate contempt of his gospel, and the cruelties exercised towards the ministers of Christ, which completed their guilt in crucifying him.—As, however, the persons first invited would not come, and proved themselves unworthy of the favour shown them; the king determined to find other guests to partake of his royal banquet: he therefore sent his servants into the public roads, ordering them to invite all that they met with, of every rank, description, and character. Accordingly they collected together a sufficient number, to furnish the wedding with guests. This represented the successful preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, and their admission to all the privileges of the Lord's people. "Not all the whole company of them, that are called by the voice of the gospel, are the true church of God: for, the most part of them had rather follow the commodities of this life; and some do most cruelly persecute those that call them. But they are the true church, who obey when they are called; such, as for the most part they are whom the world despiseth." Ver. 11—14. The preceding part of the parable represented the replenishing of the church with professed Christians: this shows the difference between nominal and real disciples. According to the custom of those times, when princes had large wardrobes, from which on some occasions they furnished numbers with suitable apparel; it must be supposed, that wedding-garments were offered to each guest when they entered the banqueting house: for it could not be expected, that travellers were properly habited for the royal entertainment, to which they were so unexpectedly invited. One man, however, either proud of his own apparel, or despising the feast, obtained admission without the wedding-garment, and continued unnoticed till the king came in to see his guests: when, being questioned how he came there, he was speechless, (which he could not have been, had not a garment been offered him:) and he was therefore ordered to be excluded and punished, as a despiser of the king and the royal banquet, by being thrown, bound hand foot, into some dark dungeon without the palace; where weeping and extreme vexation would be his portion, whilst the guests were enjoying the feast.—This denotes, that some who are not true believers, appear willing and welcome guests at the gospel-feast, and intrude into its most sacred ordinances. It is not material whether we understand the wedding-garment to mean the imputed righteousness of Christ, or the sanctification of the Spirit; for, both are alike necessary, and they always go together. No man can obtain either of these blessings, except from Christ: yet they, who remain unrighteous and unholy, besides all their other crimes, are chargeable with refusing the blessing when offered them. Such persons often impose on ministers and Christians: but when the King shall come to scrutinize the whole multitude of his guests, he will detect their hypocrisy, silence their excuses, and expose their wickedness.

Payment of Tribute.—See Luke xx. 21.

Refutation of the Sadducees.—Ver. 23—33. Our Lord first declared that they greatly erred, because they understood not the Scriptures, nor the power of God, to raise the dead incorruptible and fitted for a far different life than this. Among other egregious errors, the Sadducees took no notice of a state of punishment in the future world; but spake as if they, who believed the resurrection, thought all men, (at least all Jews,) to be of one character, and to go to one place.—But our Lord further informed them, that marriage was only intended for this present world, to replenish the earth, and to repair the ravages that death continually makes among its inhabitants; but that in the future state, as there would be no death, so no marriage, for all the righteous would be made like unto the angels, as the children of God as well as the children of the resurrection. There the very body will be made spiritual, and all the employments and pleasures will be pure, intellectual, and angelic.—Having refuted this cavil, our Lord next proceeded to establish the truth of the doctrine opposed, from that part of the Scripture which they professed to believe: he therefore referred them to the words of God to Moses, when he spake to him from the burning bush. The patriarchs had been dead a considerable time

The scribes' and Pharisees' good doctrine, but evil examples of life, 1. The destruction of Jerusalem foretold, 34.

THEN spake Jesus [a]to the multitude, and to his disciples,

2 Saying, [b]The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:[1]

3 All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not.

4 For they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

5 But all their works they do for to be seen of men: they make broad their phylacteries,[2] and enlarge the borders of their garments,

6 And love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues,

7 And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.

8 But be not ye called Rabbi: for [m]one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father upon the earth: [p]for one is your Father, which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ.

11 But [q]he that is greatest among you shall ye your servant.

12 And [r]whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

13 ¶ But [s]woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! [t]for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

14 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer:[3] therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

15 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than yourselves.

16 Woe unto you, ye blind guides! which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, [d]it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, [e]he is a debtor.

17 Ye fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gold, [f]or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?

19 Ye fools, and blind! for whether is greater, the gift, [g]or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?

20 Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, [h]and by him that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth [i]by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon.

23 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! [k]for ye pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin,[4] and have omitted [l]the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: [m]these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

24 Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat,[5] and swallow a camel.

25 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! [o]for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess.

26 Thou blind Pharisee, [q]cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

27 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited [s]sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

28 Even so [t]ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, [u]but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

29 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because [x]ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,[6]

30 And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in [y]the blood of the prophets.

31 Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, [a]that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets.

32 Fill ye up then [b]the measure of your fathers.

before this: yet the Lord there declared himself to be their God; but he is not the God of the dead who have sunk into non-existence, but of the living who are capable of enjoying his favour. This argument seems at first sight more immediately to prove, that the souls of the patriarchs were in existence and felicity, than to evince the resurrection of their bodies: but if we consider, that man is constituted of soul and body, we shall perceive that it proves both; for if Jehovah gave himself by an everlasting covenant to be the God and portion of any person; it implied that he would finally render him happy in body and soul, by bringing him to the complete enjoyment of his presence and favour; and this could not be done unless the body was restored from the grave.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIII. PHARISAISM.—Ver. 1—4. Our Lord seems to have continued still in the temple; and to have addressed himself to the disciples and the multitude, in the presence of the Scribes and Pharisees. These were the stated teachers and rulers of the nation; in these respects they sat in Moses' seat; for they explained the law of Moses to the people, and enforced obedience to it. Whatever therefore from this source they inculcated, the people ought to attend to and practise. This limitation must be admitted; otherwise their traditions and perversions of the law, and even their opposition to Christ, would have been included; for they taught these to the people. But he evidently meant, that whatever they enforced or required according to the law of Moses, or the writings of the prophets, was to be obeyed. "All that they require from the books of Moses, or the law of God, [Theophylact;] which interpretation must be allowed of. Because Christ elsewhere requires his disciples to 'beware of the leaven,' that is, the doctrine, of the Scribes and Pharisees; because they taught 'for doctrines the commandments of men,' and by their traditions 'made void the law of God;' and were 'blind leaders of the blind.'" [Whitby.] No argument can fairly be formed on this, to prove that men are obliged to follow the instructions or obey the commands of any teachers or rulers, further than they consist with the word of God; yet on the other hand, their bad characters should not induce men to disobey their lawful commands, or to reject their scriptural instructions. But, corrupt as the doctrine of the Scribes was, their works were still worse; and therefore the people were in no respect to imitate them; as they did not even practise their own injunctions. Indeed, by enforcing, under severe penalties, great exactness in ceremonial observances, and in their traditional restrictions and austerities, as well as in moral duties; they bound up very heavy burdens to lay on the shoulders of the people; but they found out methods of dispensing with whatever was uneasy to themselves, or compounding for it; so that they would not put a finger to assist in moving the load which they imposed on others.—Scott.

PROSELYTISM.—Ver. 15. Their cursed impiety in abusing their proselytes when they were made; "Ye make him the disciple of a Pharisee, presently, and he sucks in all a Pharisee's notions: and so 'ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves.'" Note, 1. Hypocrites, while they fancy themselves heirs of heaven, are, in the judgment of Christ, the children of hell. The rise of their hypocrisy is from hell, for the devil is the father of lies; and the tendency of their hypocrisy is toward hell, that is the country they belong to, the inheritance they are heirs to; they are called "children of hell," because of their rooted enmity to the kingdom of heaven, which was the principle and genius of Pharisaism. 2. Though all that maliciously oppose the gospel are children of hell, yet some are twofold more so than others, more furious, and bigoted, and malignant. 3. Perverted proselytes are commonly the greatest bigots; the scholars outdid their masters. (1.) In fondness of ceremony; the Pharisees themselves saw the folly of their own impositions, and in their hearts smiled at the obsequiousness of those that conformed to them; but their proselytes were eager for them. Note, Weak heads commonly admire those shows and ceremonies which wise men (however for public ends they countenance them) cannot but think meanly of. (2.) In fury against Christianity; the proselytes readily imbibed the principles which their crafty leaders were not wanting to possess them with, and so became extremely hot against the truth. The most bitter enemies the apostles met with in all places, were the Hellenist Jews, who were mostly proselytes, Acts xiii. 45; xiv. 2, 19; xvii. 5; xviii. 6. Paul, a disciple of the Pharisees, was "exceedingly mad against the Christians," Acts xxvi. 11, when his master, Gamaliel, seems to have been more moderate.—Henry.

HYPOCRISY.—Ver. 25—28. These Scribes and Pharisees, who "trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others," and proudly rejected the salvation of Christ, were mere hypocrites. They acted as absurdly, as a man would do, who should carefully wash the outside of his cup or dish, and yet leave the inside filthy and nauseous with the remains of his former excesses. They were careful to maintain a decent exterior, and to practise outward duties, as far as human inspection could reach; but they paid no attention to the state of their imaginations or affections: so that avarice, pride, and sensuality, reigned with uncontrolled dominion in their hearts; and induced them covertly to grasp at wealth by extortion, and to spend it in inordinate self-indulgence. Indeed they only resembled the sepulchres of rich persons, which, being painted and decorated, appeared beautiful to the beholder; yet, they contained nothing but dead men's bones, putrid corpses, and such things as were loathsome and polluting. Thus, they appeared righteous to their neighbours, but God saw and abhorred their inward and secret wickedness, though varnished over by hypocrisy.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV.

The destruction of the temple foretold, 1. Of Christ's coming to judgment, 29.

AND Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him, for to shew him the buildings of the temple.

2 And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, [o]There shall not be left here one stone upon another,[1] that shall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be [s]the sign of thy coming, and of [h]the end of the world?

4 And Jesus answered and said unto them, [i]Take heed that no man deceive you:

5 For many shall come [k]in my name, saying, I am Christ;[2] and shall deceive many.

6 And ye shall hear of wars, and rumours of wars; see that ye be not troubled; for all these things must come to pass, [o]but the end is not yet.

7 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:[3] and there shall be [q]famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.

8 All [r]these are the beginning of sorrows.

9 Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake.

10 And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

11 And [z]many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many.

12 And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.

15 When [e]ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of [f]by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place,[4] (whoso readeth, let him understand,)

16 Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains:

17 Let him which is on the house-top not come down to take any thing out of his house:

18 Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes.

19 And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days!

20 But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, [m]neither on the sabbath-day:

21 For [n]then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

22 And [o] except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved:[5] but [p]for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.

23 Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not.

24 For [r]there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, [s]and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

27 For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also [a]the coming of the Son of man be.

28 For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

29 ¶ Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken:[6]

30 And then shall appear [c]the sign of the Son of man in heaven: [f]and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall [g]see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

31 And [h]he shall send his angels with *a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall [i]gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

32 ¶ Now learn [n]a parable of the fig-tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh:

Christ's Tenderness.—Christ's design is to gather poor souls, gather them in from their wanderings, gather them home to himself, as the Centre of unity; for "to him must the gathering of the people be." He would have taken the whole body of the Jewish nation into the church, and so gathered them all (as the Jews used to speak of proselytes) "under the wings of the Divine Majesty." It is here illustrated by an humble similitude; "as a hen" clucks "her chickens together." Christ would have gathered them, First, With such a tenderness of affection as the hen does, which has, by instinct, a peculiar concern for her young ones. Christ's gathering of souls comes from his love, Jer. xxxi. 3. Secondly, For the same end. "The hen gathered her chickens under her wings," for protection and safety, and for warmth and comfort; poor souls have in Christ both refuge and refreshment. The chickens naturally run to the hen for shelter, when they are threatened by the birds of prey; perhaps Christ refers to that promise, Ps. xci. 4, "He shall cover thee with his feathers." There is "healing under Christ's wings," Mal. iv. 2, that is more than the hen has for her chickens.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIV. Signs of Christ's Coming.—Ver. 3. After our Lord had removed with his disciples to the mount of Olives, where they had the temple full in view; they privately asked him some questions concerning the events which he had mentioned: but, their meaning is not very clear and explicit. Perhaps they had a general idea, that he would go from them for a time, before he set up his kingdom; that he would at length come in a very glorious manner, according to several intimations which he had given them; that he would then execute the predicted vengeance on his enemies, destroy the temple, terminate that dispensation, and introduce his own glorious reign as the Messiah. Some expositors suppose this to be the meaning of the phrase translated, the end of the world. But it is difficult to determine what opinions the disciples then held concerning that subsequent dispensation: and perhaps they scarcely knew the precise meaning of their own questions; for their views were as yet very dark and confused. Some suppose that they thought that the day of judgment and the end of the world would be immediately connected with the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple; and that our Lord did not see good explicitly to undeceive them. Indeed this is not improbable; for the latter part of the chapter is couched in language very applicable to those events; and it is proper for prophecy to be in some measure obscure till it is accomplished. The general import, however, of their inquiry was, when the events before intimated would take place? and what signs would indicate their approach? "Being asked by the disciples, when those things, which he had intimated concerning the desolation of the temple, should take place; he set before them the order of the times, first concerning the Jews, till the destruction of Jerusalem, and then concerning men in general, till the end of the world." [Tertullian.]—Scott.

False Christs.—Ver. 5. There should appear "false christs, coming in Christ's name," assuming to themselves the name peculiar to him, and saying, "I am Christ, pseudo-Christ," ver. 24. There was at that time a general expectation of the appearing of the Messias; they spoke of him as "he that shall come;" but when he did come, the body of the nation rejected him; which those who were ambitious of making themselves a name took advantage of, and set up for Christs. Josephus speaks of several such impostors between this and the destruction of Jerusalem; one Theudas, that was defeated by Cuspius Fadus; another by Felix, another by Festus. Dosetheus said, he was the Christ foretold by Moses, Origen adversus Celsum. See Acts v. 36, 37; xxi. 28. Simon Magus pretended to be "the great power of God," Acts viii. 10. In after ages there have been such pretenders; one about a hundred years after Christ, that called himself Bar-cohobas—The son of a star, but proved Bar-cosba—The son of a lie. About fifty years ago, Sabbati-Levi set up for a Messiah in the Turkish empire, and was greatly caressed by the Jews; but in a short time his folly was made manifest: see Sir Paul Rycant's History.—Henry.

Abomination of Desolation.—Ver. 15—18. An abomination is the scriptural term for idols and idolatry, and in various ways these tended to desolate the church; but "the abomination of desolation here signifies," the Roman armies, with their idolatrous standards, encamping on the holy ground, which was supposed to extend to some furlongs' distance from Jerusalem on every side. This approach of the Roman armies to besiege that city was thus pointed out to the Christians, as the signal for them to retire to a place of safety; and they were exhorted to apply their minds, that they might understand what they read. When this token of approaching desolation was seen, they must without delay shift for their lives, by leaving Judea, and taking shelter in the surrounding mountains; and be so earnest in doing this, that if a man were walking on the flat roof of his house when the signal was observed, he ought not to go into his house to carry away with him any part of his property, but to go down the nearest way, (which generally was on the outside,) and flee for safety: nay, a man at work in the field without his upper garment, must not go and fetch it, lest the delay should cost him his life. "By the special providence of God, after the Romans under Cestius Gallus made their first advance towards Jerusalem, they suddenly withdrew again, in an unexpected, and indeed an impolitic manner; at which Josephus testifies his surprise, since the city might then have easily been taken. By this means, they gave, as it were, a signal to the Christians to retire; which in regard to this admonition they did, some to Pella, and

As to the very day and hour it was granted to no one to make known, neither to the angels in heaven, nor to the Son; but the Father only had reserved this time and season in his own power (compare Zech. xiv. 7; Acts i. 7). —Boothroyd.

[5] The word translated "joy," is applied particularly to a feast. The metaphor is still used of representing the joys of heaven by a feast; and the master, in reward for his servant's good conduct, invites him to feast with him. —Whitby.

3 They that were [h]foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them:

4 But the wise took [i]oil[2] in their vessels with their lamps.

5 While the bridegroom tarried, [l]they all slumbered and slept.

6 And at midnight there was a cry made, [c]Behold, the bridegroom cometh; [p]go ye out to meet him.

7 Then [q]all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

8 And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are [*]gone out.

9 But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

10 And while they went to buy, [x]the bridegroom came;[3] and [y]they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut.

11 Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

12 But he answered, and said, Verily I say unto you, [b]I know you not.

13 Watch therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

14 ¶ For the kingdom of heaven is [4]as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, [e]and delivered unto them his goods.

15 And unto one he gave five talents,[4] to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey.

16 Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

17 And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18 But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

19 After [k]a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and [l]reckoneth with them.

20 And so he that had received five talents came, and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me five talents: behold, I have gained besides them five talents more.

21 His lord said unto him, [n]Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, [c]I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.[5]

22 He also that had received two talents came, and said, Lord, thou deliveredst unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

23 His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been others to mount Libanus, and thereby preserved their lives." [Doddridge.]—"These admonitions were not lost upon the disciples: for we learn from the best ecclesiastical historians, that, when the Roman armies approached Jerusalem, all the Christians left that devoted city, and fled to Pella, a mountainous country, and to other places beyond Jordan.—And Josephus also informs us, that when Vespasian was drawing his forces towards Jerusalem, a great multitude fled from Jericho into the mountainous country, for their security." [Bp. Porteus.]

Fidelity.—Ver. 45—51. The exhortation applies to all the professed servants of Christ, but to ministers especially, who are watchmen by office, as well as "stewards of the mysteries of God." Who then is that faithful, and prudent steward, that is qualified to be placed over the household of faith, to dispense to each individual his portion in due season; warning, instructing, encouraging, or reproving, according to every man's character, wants, and conduct, by the rule of God's word, for the honour of his name, and from disinterested love to souls? The servant, that shall be found diligently and humbly employed in this work when his Lord shall come, will be most happy; for he will be highly honoured and advanced in his glorious kingdom. But if a man, professing to be the servant of Christ, be an unbeliever, actuated by avarice, ambition, or sensuality; if he supposes that his Lord will never come to call him to an account, or that he shall have time enough to get ready before he comes; and shall thus be emboldened to domineer and tyrannize over his fellow-servants, as a rapacious oppressor or cruel persecutor; or shall indulge in luxury and excess: the Lord of that servant will come to take vengeance on him, when he least expects it; by some tremendous judgment he will cut him off, separating his body and soul; and he will, after death, appoint him his portion with hypocrites, to whom belongeth greater damnation, and there he will for ever weep and gnash his teeth in anguish and despair.—Whatever reference might here be intended to the case of apostates and heretics, in the primitive times, luxurious, sensual, domineering, and unprincipled ministers of Christianity are, doubtless, immediately intended.—"Mahomet mentions seven caverns in hell, the deepest and most wretched of which is to be inhabited by hypocrites." [Doddridge.]—Scott.

Chap. XXV. Parable of the Ten Virgins.—Ver. 1—13. The circumstances of the parable were taken from the customs of the Jews, in celebrating nuptials. The bridegroom used to go in the evening to fetch home his bride by the light of lamps: these were attended by bridemaids, who, some say, were never fewer than ten; and when they [illegible] there met [illegible] for them, and the company. Christ is [illegible] bride, who wait for his coming: and their continuance in this world constitutes the time of their waiting. We must not, however, suppose that all nominal Christians are intended. They only are meant who make a credible profession of the gospel and act in such a manner as to give real Christians so favourable an opinion of them as to admit them into their society. Of the ten here mentioned "five were wise, and five were foolish." The latter had lamps, but no oil in their vessels to replenish them with: that is, they had religion enough to make a plausible appearance; but their hearts were not truly sanctified, and stored with holy affections and dispositions, by the new-creating Spirit of God. Indeed, they had not been careful in this respect, when they first sought admission among true Christians. But the wise had "oil in their vessels," as well as the external lamp of profession. The delay of the bridegroom represents the intermediate space between the real or supposed conversion of these professed believers and the coming of Christ: their slumbering and sleeping intimates the comparative unwatchfulness and inattention even of many real Christians, as well as of hypocrites, when thoughts of death and judgment are excluded for a season; and it shows that the difference between the two characters often consists more in the state of their hearts than in their external conduct. The coming of the bridegroom "at midnight," with a loud summons to the virgins to meet him, represents the unexpected manner in which Christ calls men out of the world, and in which he will come to judgment, and the surprise thus occasioned to hypocrites. The conduct of the virgins, when they heard this summons, denotes the earnest inquiries into the state of their souls, and the endeavours to get all ready, to which the apprehensions of immediate death or judgment excite professors of the gospel. This at length discovered the difference between the wise and the foolish virgins. The latter, when they came to trim their lamps, found that they were going out, nor had they any oil with which to feed them. Thus the hypocrite's religion serves him to make a show with whilst he lives; but when he comes to die, and what wants its support and benefit, it goes out, and leaves him to darkness and despair. But the wise virgins, when they came to trim their lamps, had oil ready with which to replenish them: thus true Christians, notwithstanding comparative inattentions, are habitually ready for all events.—The application of the foolish virgins to the wise for some of their oil, shows that numbers are at last convinced of their bad condition, and frequently apply to ministers or believers for their prayers and sympathy in their distress; or it might prophetically expose the vanity of the [illegible] superstition, human merits, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

24 Then he which had received the one talent came, and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed:

25 And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26 His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed:

27 Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers,[6] and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28 Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29 For unto every one that hath shall be given,[7] and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath.

30 And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

31 ¶ When [f]the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory;

32 And before him shall be gathered all nations; and [i]he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

33 And he shall set the sheep on [i]his right hand, but the goats on the left.[8]

34 Then shall [m]the King say unto them on his right hand, [n]Come, ye blessed of my Father, [o]inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world:

35 For [r]I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was [s]thirsty, and ye gave me drink: [t]I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

36 [u]Naked, and ye clothed me: I [x]was sick, and ye visited me: [y]I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

37 Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38 When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39 Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

40 And the King shall answer, and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.[9]

41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into [h]everlasting fire, [i]prepared for the devil and his angels:

42 For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink:

43 I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

44 Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

45 Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

46 And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal.[10]

AND it came to pass, [a]when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples,

2 Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover,[1] and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 ¶ Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4 And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him.

5 But they said, Not on the feast-day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

6 ¶ Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of [m]Simon the leper,

7 There [n]came unto him a woman having an alabaster-box of [o]very precious ointment, and poured it on his head as he sat at meat.[2]

8 But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9 For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

10 When Jesus understood it, he said unto them, [s]Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought [t]a good work upon me.

11 For ye have the poor always with you; [x]but me ye have not always.

12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial.

13 Verily I say unto you, [z]Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, [a]there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

being ready, and the folly and misery of an unprepared state, and of carnal and presumptuous procrastination. The wise virgins, being ready, were admitted to the marriage-feast; but the door was immediately shut; and the others, coming afterwards, were denied admission, and disowned by the bridegroom, as persons with whom he had no acquaintance. Our Lord then made the same application of it that he had before done of the subject in the former chapter.

PARABLE OF THE TALENTS.—See Luke xix. 12.

THE JUDGMENT.—Ver. 34—40. The King, not only of the Jews, or of the church, but of the whole world, (as our Lord on this occasion called himself,) will address the company at his right hand, as "the blessed of his Father;" his chosen, redeemed, regenerate, adopted, and beloved children, whom he hath determined to render most blessed for evermore. He will call them "to come to him," that they may behold and share his glory, and concur with him in the judgment about to be given upon the wicked; and that they may "inherit the kingdom," or that confluence of all honours, riches, felicities, and pleasures, "which had been prepared for them from the foundation of the world," in the counsels of God's everlasting love and mercy. And in order to show that they are indeed the persons for whom this inheritance was prepared, he will next make known their good works, as the effect of their faith and love. They had on earth proved themselves his cordial friends: insomuch that they had given him meat when he was hungry, and drink when he was thirsty; when he was a stranger and destitute, they had hospitably entertained him; when in want of raiment, they had clothed him; when sick, they had visited and tended upon him; and when in prison, through oppression or persecution, they had owned him, and had come to inquire into his wants, and to administer to his comforts.—On hearing this, the righteous are represented as inquiring when they had ever seen him in such circumstances, and relieved him in this manner? For they will not be conscious of having done any service worthy of this honourable notice and abundant recompense. To which the King will answer, that "inasmuch as they did it to the least of 'these his brethren,'" (the poor afflicted Christians whom they relieved for his sake, who will be present to bear grateful testimony to their labour of love and expensive kindness, and whom the King of glory will condescend to own as his brethren,) "they did it unto him." It is impossible that human language can express greater encouragement to self-denying, assiduous, laborious, and expensive charity to poor Christians, for the sake of our common Lord, than is contained in this declaration. We must not, however, suppose that acts of liberality, from whatever motive, will constitute a man's title to eternal felicity; and there cannot be a more fatal delusion than this too common, but groundless inference, from this and a few similar texts. For many who are liberal, humane, and compassionate in some instances, live habitually in the practice of those sins, of which it is expressly said, that "they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." And as none but believers are the brethren of Christ, so love to Christ must be the motive of the liberality and kindness here spoken of. So that these actions will be produced as evidences of the excellency and efficacy of justifying faith and the love of Christ; of a person's having been a real believer, and not a mere professor; and to show that there is a propriety in the Lord's honouring him in heaven who thus proved himself his zealous friend on earth.—Scott.

FINAL DESTINY.—Ver. 46. "The wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment." Sentence will then be executed speedily, and no reprieve granted, nor any time allowed to move in arrest of judgment. The execution of the wicked is first mentioned; for first the tares are gathered and burned. Note, 1. The punishment of the wicked in the future state will be an everlasting punishment, for that state is an unalterable state. It can neither be thought that sinners should change their own natures, nor that God should give his grace to change them, when in this world the day of grace was misspent, the Spirit of grace resisted, and the means of grace abused and baffled. 2. The wicked shall be made to go away into that punishment; not that they will go voluntarily, no, they are "driven" from light into darkness; but it bespeaks an irresistible conviction of guilt, and a final despair of mercy.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. THE ALABASTER BOX.—Ver. 6—7. In this passage of story, we have, the singular kindness of a good woman to our Lord Jesus in anointing his head. It was "in Bethany," a village hard by Jerusalem, and "in the house of Simon the leper." Probably, he was one who had been miraculously cleansed from his leprosy by our Lord Jesus, and he would express his gratitude to Christ by entertaining him; nor did Christ disdain to converse with him, to come in to him, and sup with him. Though he was cleansed, yet he was called Simon the leper. Those who are guilty of scandalous sins, will find, that, though the sin be pardoned, the reproach will cleave to them, and will hardly be wiped away. The woman that did this is supposed to have been Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus. And Dr. Lightfoot thinks it was the same that was called Mary Magdalene. She had a "box of ointment very precious," which she "poured upon the head" of Christ as he sat at meat. This, among us, would be a strange sort of compliment. But it was then accounted the highest piece of respect; for the smell was very grateful, and the ointment itself refreshing to the head. David had his "head anointed," Ps. xxiii. 5; Luke vii. 46. Now this may be looked upon, 1. As an act of faith in our Lord Jesus, the Christ, the Messiah, the Anointed. To signify that 16 And from that time [f]he sought opportunity to betray him.

17 ¶ Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, [h]Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?

18 And he said, [i]Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, [k]My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples.

19 And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the passover.

20 Now, when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve.

21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, That one of you shall betray me.

22 And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I?

23 And he answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish,[4] the same shall betray me.

24 The [t]Son of man goeth, as it is written of him: [x]but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

25 Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

26 ¶ And as they were eating, [b]Jesus took bread, and *blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; *this is my body.

27 And [f]he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, [g]Drink ye all of it:[5]

28 For this is [h]my blood of the new testament, which is [i]shed for many for the remission of sins.

29 But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.

30 And when they had sung an [†]hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

31 Then saith Jesus unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, [u]I will smite the shepherd, [r]and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad.

32 But after [s]I am risen again, I will go before you into Galilee.

33 Peter answered and said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended.

34 Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

35 Peter said unto him, [z]Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewise also said all the disciples.

36 ¶ Then cometh Jesus with them unto [b]a place called Gethsemane,[6] and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37 And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be *sorrowful and very heavy.

38 Then saith he unto them, [f]My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.

39 And he went a little farther, [h]and fell on his face, [i]and prayed, saying, [k]O my Father, [l]if it be possible, [m]let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, [n]not as I will, but as thou wilt.

40 And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, [p]What! could ye not watch with me one hour?

41 [q]Watch and pray, that ye [r]enter not into temptation:[7] [s]the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

42 He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

43 And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy.

44 And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

45 Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, [z]the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

47 ¶ And while he yet spake, [b]lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48 Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, [c]Whomsoever I shall kiss,[8] that same is he; hold him fast.

49 And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; [f]and kissed him.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

51 And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear.

52 Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: for all [k]they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, [l]and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?

she believed in him as God's Anointed, whom he had set King, she anointed him, and made him her King. They shall "appoint themselves one Head," Hos. i. 11. This is "kissing the Son." 2. As an act of love and respect to him. Some think that this was she who "loved much" at first, and "washed Christ's feet with her tears," Luke vii. 47; and that she had not left her first love, but was now as affectionate in the devotions of a grown Christian as she was in those of a young beginner. Note, Where there is true love in the heart to Jesus Christ, nothing will be thought too good, no, nor good enough, to bestow upon him.

TREACHERY OF JUDAS.—Ver. 14—16. Observe, 1. What Judas promised; "'I will deliver him unto you;' I will let you know where he is, and undertake to bring you to him, at such a convenient time and place, that you may seize him without noise, or danger of an uproar." In their conspiracy against Christ, this was it they were at a loss about, ver. 4, 5. They durst not meddle with him in public, and knew not where to find him in private. Here the matter rested, and the difficulty was insuperable, till Judas came, and offered them his service. Note, Those that give up themselves to be led by the devil, find him readier than they imagine to help them at a dead-lift, as Judas did the chief priests. Though the rulers, by their power and interest, could kill him when they had him in their hands, yet none but a disciple could betray him. Note, The greater profession men make of religion, and the more they are employed in the study and service of it, the greater opportunity they have of doing mischief, if their hearts be not right with God. If Judas had not been an apostle, he could not have been a traitor; if men had not known the way of righteousness, they could not have abused it. "I will deliver him unto you." He did not offer himself, nor did they tamper with him, to be a witness against Christ, though they wanted evidence, ver. 59. And if there had been any thing to be alleged against him, which had but colour of proof that he was an impostor, Judas was the likeliest person to have attested it; but this is an evidence of the innocency of our Lord Jesus, that his own disciple, who knew so well his doctrine and manner of his life, and was false to him, could not charge him with any thing criminal, though it would have served to justify his treachery. 2. What he asked in consideration of this undertaking; "What will ye give me?" This was the only thing that made Judas betray his Master; he hoped to get money by it: his Master had not given him any provocation, though he knew from the first that he "had a devil;" yet, for aught that appears, he showed the same kindness to him that he did to the rest, and put no mark of disgrace upon him that might disoblige him: he had placed him in a post that pleased him, and made him purse-bearer; and though he had embezzled the common stock, for he is called "a thief," John xii. 6, yet we do not find he was in any danger of being called to account for it; nor does it appear that he had any suspicion that the gospel was a cheat; no, it was not the hatred of his Master, nor any quarrel with him, but purely the love of the money; that, and nothing else, made Judas a traitor. "What will ye give me?" Why, what did he want? Neither bread to eat, nor raiment to put on; neither necessaries nor conveniences. Was he not welcome wherever his Master was? Did he not fare as he fared? Had he not been but just now nobly entertained at a supper in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, and a little before, at another, where no less a person than Martha herself waited at table? And yet this covetous wretch could not be content, but comes basely cringing to the priests with, "What will ye give me?" Note, It is not the lack of money, but the love of money, that is the root of all evil, and particularly of apostacy from Christ; witness Demas, 2 Tim. iv. 10. Satan tempted our Saviour with this bait, "All this will I give thee," chap. iv. 9; but Judas offered himself to be tempted with it; he asks, "What will ye give me?" as if his Master was a commodity that stuck on his hands.—Henry.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.—See Luke xxii. 19.

THE AGONY IN THE GARDEN.—Ver. 36—39. The words used on this occasion are the most expressive imaginable, and denote the greatest dejection, amazement, anguish, and horror of mind that can be conceived: the state of one surrounded with sorrows, overwhelmed with miseries, and almost swallowed up with consternation and dismay. In this frame of mind, he went a little way from the disciples; and first kneeling down, but afterwards prostrating himself on the earth, he prayed to his Father, that if it were "possible, that cup might pass from him." Some refer this to the present anguish and horror which he felt in his soul, and not to his approaching crucifixion: but whatever we understand by it, it expressed his strong aversion to suffering, save when the glory of God and the good of man required it; and it showed that he had all the innocent feelings of our nature in the most exquisite degree; that had it been possible, that is, consistent with the justice, truth, holiness, and mercy of God, to have had his sufferings mitigated or remitted, he would have desired it, as much as we should in similar circumstances; and the retractation in the subsequent clause, showed his perfect resignation, and willingness to bear that unspeakable load, which must otherwise have sunk us into everlasting destruction. We find from St. Luke, that when Jesus was at prayer, an angel was sent to encourage and strengthen his mind for the conflict; and that, (though the night was cold,) his whole frame was agitated to such a degree, "that his sweat became as great drops of blood falling to the ground."—It therefore occurs here to inquire into the cause, or causes, of our Lord's agony. He had doubtless a clear and full view of all the sufferings which he was to undergo, with all their various aggra-

54 But [o]how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?

55 In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

56 But all this was done,[9] [r]that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. [s]Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

57 ¶ And they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.

58 But Peter followed him afar off unto the high priest's palace, and went in, and sat with the servants, to see the end.

59 Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the council, [x]sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death;

60 But found none:[10] yea, though many false witnesses came, yet found they none. At the last came two false witnesses,

61 And said, This fellow said, [b]I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days.

62 And the high priests arose, and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

63 But [d]Jesus held his peace. And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be [g]the Christ, the Son of God.

64 Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said: nevertheless, I say unto you, Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on [k]the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

65 Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, [m]He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy.

66 What think ye? They answered and said, [n]He is guilty of death.

67 Then [o]did they spit in his face,[11] and buffeted him; and others smote him with [‡]the palms of their hands,

68 Saying, Prophesy unto us, [r]thou Christ, Who is he that smote thee?

69 ¶ Now Peter sat without in the palace: and a damsel came unto him, saying, Thou also wast with [t]Jesus of Galilee.

70 But [u]he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

71 And [x]when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, [y]This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

72 And again he denied [z]with an oath, [a]I do not know the man.

CHAP. XXVII.

Christ delivered to Pilate, 1. Judas hangeth himself, 3. Christ is crucified, 33.

WHEN the morning was come, [b]all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death.

2 And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate[1] the governor.

3 ¶ Then [c]Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, [f]repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4 Saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed [h]the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

5 And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself.

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, [m]It is not lawful for [n]to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field,[2] to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day.

9 (Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, [q]And they took the [r]thirty pieces of silver, the [s]price of him that was valued, whom they [*]of the children of Israel did value,

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.)

11 ¶ And Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.[3]

12 And when [u]he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing.

13 Then saith Pilate unto him, [x]Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee?

14 And he answered him to never a word; insomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

15 ¶ Now at that [z]feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.

vations: but he had had the same all along; yet he had acted and spoken with the most entire serenity, even to the very moment of this extraordinary scene. Many of his disciples, in different ages, have met the most excruciating tortures, which human, or rather diabolical, ingenuity and cruelty could devise, without any such perturbation; being supported by inward peace, consolation, and joyful hope: and doubtless Christ was as much superior to them all, in fortitude and constancy, as the heavens are above the earth. We must therefore conclude, that there were some ingredients mingled in this cup, which were not in theirs, and some in theirs, which were not in his. To mention the treachery and fate of Judas, or the misconduct of Peter and the other apostles, or the unbelief of the Jews, as causes of this surprising effect, must fail to give the reflecting mind any satisfactory view of the subject.—We must also exclude from this case many of those things that cause the most exquisite misery to the human mind of which it is capable; for there could be in the mind of the holy Jesus no horrors of a guilty conscience, no conflict of sinful passions, no despair as to the final event of his sufferings. It is not indeed possible for us fully to understand or explain this subject: yet we may point out the light which the Scriptures afford us upon it. Christ sustained the character of our surety, who undertook to be answerable for our sins: accordingly "our iniquities were laid upon him," and "he was made sin for us," and suffered for sins, the just for the unjust; and the Scripture ascribes his heaviest sufferings to the immediate hand of God: "It pleased the Lord to bruise him . . . he made his soul a sacrifice for sin." The sword of divine justice was commanded to awake against the Shepherd, and smite him; and "God spared not his own Son." We may from these and similar Scriptures conclude, that the human nature of Christ was on this occasion left wholly destitute of all consolatory communications from the Holy Spirit, though supported by its union with the Deity, to endure the unknown anguish without sinking under it; that he had the fullest discovery to his mind of the infinite evil of sin, and of that immensity of guilt which he was to expiate; that he had the most awful view of the divine justice and holiness, and the vengeance deserved by the sins of men; and that such a sense of the divine wrath oppressed his inmost soul, as no tongue can express, or imagination conceive.

Christ before the Tribunal.—Ver. 63—68. Our Lord remained silent before this iniquitous tribunal, not merely from perfect meekness and patience, but as our surety, that we might have an effectual plea before the tribunal of God. The high priest, therefore, at length solemnly adjured him by the living God, to declare whether he was the Christ, the Son of the living God, or not? This was the customary method at that time of putting men upon their oath, to which the criminals, or witnesses were required to answer as in the presence of God. When the matter therefore was thus proposed, our Lord saw good to answer, that indeed he had declared the real truth; and that, notwithstanding his present despised condition, they would see him, as the Son of man, sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. This is generally interpreted, with reference to the prophecy of Daniel, of his exaltation at the right hand of the Father, which was manifested by the pouring out of the Spirit on his disciples, and the vengeance executed by his power on Jerusalem: but his final coming to judgment seems also to have been intended; and the members of the council were warned that they would at length be constrained to stand before his awful tribunal. —Scott.

Peter's Fall.—See Mark xiv. 66.

CHAP. XXVII. Remorse and Suicide of Judas.—Ver. 3—5. Being left by God, Satan, who before had tempted Judas to presumption, now urged him to despair. Yet before his last fatal determination, perhaps hoping to obtain a reversal of Christ's condemnation, he went to the chief priests and elders, to return the wages of his iniquity. They were at that time in the precincts of the temple; whether they held their council there, and had not yet delivered up Jesus to Pilate; or whether they had gone thither after he was delivered up to be crucified, in order to perform some hypocritical task of devotion. In their presence, however, Judas acknowledged that he had sinned, in that he had betrayed an innocent person into their hands, who was by that means likely to be put to death; and he was now fully sensible, that his conduct had been peculiarly base and criminal. This was a most honourable testimony to Christ's character; but though this crime lay with intolerable weight on the conscience of Judas, and he confessed it to man, and dared not to keep the infamous wages of his crime; yet it does not appear that he was at all sensible of the guilt of his hypocrisy, and all the other wickedness committed during the whole course of his past life. But the rulers were too malignant and hardened, to be any ways affected by this interesting circumstance: and they coldly declared, that the opinion and conduct of so vile a wretch concerned not them; let him look to that himself, for they were determined to put Jesus to death. This completed Judas's despair; and, casting down the money he departed, and immediately "went and hanged himself." It seems evident that he was his own executioner, by "strangling himself;" and this account may be reconciled with that of Peter, as recorded in the Acts, by supposing that he suspended himself in such a place and manner, that the rope, or wood to which it was fastened, brake; and that he fell from a great height, and so burst asunder; this coming to pass by the special purpose of God, to render his body a more terrible spectacle to all

16 And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

17 Therefore, when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, [c] or Jesus which is called Christ?

18 For he knew that for envy they had delivered him.

19 ¶ When he was set down on the judgment-seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day [d] in a dream because of him.

20 But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they [h] should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

21 The governor answered and said unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas.

22 Pilate saith unto them, [i] What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified.

23 And the governor said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified.

24 When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it.

25 Then answered all the people, and said, [o] His blood be on us, and on our children.

26 ¶ Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged Jesus,[5] he delivered him to be crucified.

27 Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the [t] common hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers.

28 And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe.

29 ¶ And when they had [u] platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, king of the Jews!

30 And [y] they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head.

31 And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, [z] and led him away to crucify him.

32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled[6] to bear his cross.

33 ¶ And when they were come unto a place called [d] Golgotha, that is to say, A place of a skull, 34 They [e] gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink.

35 And [f] they crucified him, and [g] parted his garments, casting lots: [h] that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

36 And sitting down, they watched him there;

37 And set up over his head [k] his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.[7]

38 Then were there two thieves crucified with him; one on the right hand, and another on the left.

39 ¶ And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads,

40 And saying, Thou [o] that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, [q] come down from the cross.

41 Likewise also the chief priests, mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said, 42 He [s] saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be [t] the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him.

43 He [u] trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, [x] I am the Son of God.

44 The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.

45 Now [z] from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour.

46 And about the ninth hour [b] Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

47 Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias.[8]

48 And straightway one of them ran, and took a spunge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

49 The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

50 ¶ Jesus, [g] when he had cried again with a loud voice, [h] yielded up the ghost.

51 And, behold, [i] the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent;

52 And the graves were opened; and [l] many bodies of the saints which [m] slept arose,

53 And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city,[9] and appeared unto many.

54 Now, when the centurion, and they that were with him watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, [r] Truly this was the Son of God.

55 And [s] many women were there beholding afar off, which followed Jesus[10] from Galilee, ministering unto him:

beholders, and to cause his death to be the more remarked. It admits of little doubt, but that Judas's death preceded that of his injured Lord, so speedily did divine vengeance overtake him! Yet the rulers took no notice even of this alarming circumstance!

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.—Ver. 11—18. "Little did the governor imagine who it was that then stood before him! Little did he suspect, that he himself must one day stand before the tribunal of that very person, whom he was then about to judge as a criminal!" [Bp. Porteus.]—The rulers of the Jews knowing how jealous the Romans were of their authority, accused Jesus of advancing claims to the kingdom. Pilate therefore "asked him, saying, Art thou the king of the Jews?" To which he answered in the affirmative: yet as Pilate had doubtless heard of the inoffensive demeanour of Jesus and his few followers, he probably thought his pretensions more worthy of derision than opposition. His persecutors therefore, fearing that they should not carry their point, were earnest in laying many things to his charge, which only convinced Pilate that they envied his authority and reputation among the people, as eclipsing their own. Yet when Pilate inquired, whether Jesus had nothing to say in answer to all these accusations? he remained silent! he had no guilt to confess; yet he would not exculpate himself, for he submitted to condemnation, that he might die as a sacrifice for our sins. This silence, which doubtless was distinguished by a mild and sedate dignity of aspect, the reverse of the sullenness of an obstinate criminal, astonished Pilate. He believed him to be perfectly innocent; and yet he would use neither arguments nor intreaties to rescue himself from that terrible death with which he was threatened! Pilate was, however, desirous of releasing him, and as it had become a custom to pardon some condemned Jew, at the feast of the passover, to please the people; Pilate supposed that this custom would give him the occasion; for he concluded that the multitude in some degree favoured him. So that when they required him to indulge them as usual, he proposed none but Jesus and Barabbas. And as Barabbas was a noted criminal, who had been guilty of murder as well as robbery, he doubtless concluded, that they would unanimously prefer Jesus to him.

THE CRUCIFIXION.—Ver. 35. The soldiers proceeded to crucify Jesus. This was performed in the following manner: the sufferer was stripped almost naked, and extended on the wood of the cross as it lay on the ground; his arms were then stretched out on the transverse beam, and fastened to it by spikes driven through the hands; and the feet were fastened to the upright part of the cross, by spikes driven through both of them together. Then the cross was erected, and the foot of it, going into a hole for that purpose, with a violent jerk, often dislocated some of the bones of the crucified person; who being suspended in this dreadful posture, hung in most exquisite torture, till at length loss of blood and excess of pain ended his life. It is plain that Jesus hung in this manner for six hours, before he expired: yet it was thought wonderful that he died so soon; as many lived a whole day and night in this anguish, unless some method were taken to shorten their pains.—When the soldiers, (four of whom were employed in it,) had completed their cruel business, they proceeded to part the clothes among them as their recompense; and finding the upper garment worn by Jesus to be made of one piece, they cast lots for it: and thus several prophecies concerning the Messiah received their accomplishment in Jesus.

THE SUPERNATURAL DARKNESS.—Ver. 45. It is here supposed, that Christ was nailed to the cross at the third hour, or by nine o'clock in the morning: but this darkness did not begin before the sixth hour or noon; and it lasted till the ninth hour, or three o'clock in the afternoon. As the moon was then at the full, it could not be an eclipse from a natural cause; and probably it reached no further than the Holy Land, at least the language of the evangelists implies no more. The sun, however, seems to have been entirely obscured, and his beams intercepted; whence arose a most extraordinary and awful gloom. This was an apt emblem of the state of the spiritual world, when the Sun of righteousness and the Light of men was under an eclipse; his soul being full of darkness and horror, his character wounded with reproaches and loaded with infamy, and his body ready to expire with tortures. It was also an awful indication of the frown of heaven on the Jews and their rulers, who were guilty of this most enormous crime, from which the sun seemed to hide his astonished face, refusing his light to that land where it was committed.—Some infidels have greatly exulted, because Josephus and the pagan writers have not mentioned this phenomenon: but none have attempted to deny it, and every writer notices and records what he sees proper. Josephus and the pagan authors were in general as little disposed to bear a favourable testimony to Christianity, as modern infidels are: the former could not but have heard of it, and his silence may be considered as the effect of his inability to deny the fact, and his unwillingness to admit the proper conclusion; but the heathen authors would probably treat the report with contempt and neglect, as unworthy of regard.—Scott.

RENDING OF THE VAIL.—See Mark xv. 38.

ALARMING PHENOMENA.—Ver. 51, 52. 1. This "earthquake" signified the mighty shock, nay, the fatal blow, now given to the devil's kingdom. So vigorous was the assault Christ now made upon the infernal powers, that (as of old, "when he went out of Seir, when he marched through the field of Edom") the "earth trembled," Judg. v. 4; Ps. lxviii. 7, 8. God shakes all nations, when the Desire of all nations is to come; and there is a "yet once more," which perhaps refers to this shaking, Hag. ii. 7, 21. 2. The "rocks rent;" the hardest firmest part of the earth was made to feel this mighty shock.

56 Among which was Mary Magdalene, and [x]Mary the mother of [y]James and Joses, [z]and the mother of Zebedee's children.

57 ¶ When the even was come, [a]there came a rich man of [b]Arimathea,[11] named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple:

58 He went to Pilate, [c]and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered.

59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, 60 And laid it [d]in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled [e]a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed.

61 And there was [f]Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre.

62 ¶ Now the next day, that followed [g]the day of the preparation, [h]the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, 63 Saying, Sir, we remember that [i]that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, [k]After three days I will rise again.

64 Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, [l]He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

65 Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch; go your way, [m]make it as sure as ye can.

66 So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, [n]sealing the stone,[12] and setting a watch.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Christ's resurrection, 1. He appeareth to the women, 9, and to his disciples, 16, and sendeth them to teach, 19.

IN [a]the end of the sabbath,[1] as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came [b]Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre.

2 And, behold, [c]there *was a great earthquake: [d]for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

3 His [e]countenance was like lightning, and [f]his raiment white as snow:

4 And for fear of him [g]the keepers did [h]shake, and became as dead men.

5 And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that [k]ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

6 He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. [m]Come, see the place where the Lord lay:

7 And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee;[2] there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

8 And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his disciples word.

9 ¶ And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, [s]All hail! And they came [t]and held him by the feet, and [u]worshipped him.

10 Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

11 ¶ Now, when they were going,[3] behold, [s]some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12 And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers, 13 Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept.

14 And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

15 So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

16 ¶ Then [f]the eleven disciples [g]went away into Galilee, into a mountain[4] where Jesus had appointed them.

17 And when they saw him, they [h]worshipped him: but some doubted.

18 ¶ And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, [k]All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

19 Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, [m]baptizing them in [n]the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;

20 Teaching [o]them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, [p]I am with you alway, even [q]unto the end of the world. [r]Amen.

Christ had said, that if the children should cease to cry "Hosanna, the stones would immediately cry out;" and now, in effect, they did so, proclaiming the glory of the suffering Jesus, and themselves more sensible of the wrong done him than the hard-hearted Jews were, who yet will shortly be glad to find a "hole in the rocks, and a cleft in the ragged rocks," to hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne. See Rev. vi. 16; Is. ii. 21. But when God's "fury is poured out like fire, the rocks are thrown down by him," Nah. i. 6. Jesus Christ is "the Rock;" and the rending of "these" rocks, signified the rending of "that" rock. (1.) That in the clefts of it we may be "hid," as Moses in the cleft of the rock at Horeb, that there we may "behold the glory of the Lord," as he did, Exod. xxxiii. 22. Christ's dove is said to be "hid in the clefts of the rock," Cant. ii. 14, that is, as some make the allusion, sheltered in the wounds of our Lord Jesus, the Rock rent. (2.) That from the clefts of it rivers of living water may flow, and follow us in this wilderness, as from the rock which "Moses smote," Exod. xvii. 6, and which God clave, Ps. lxxviii. 15; and that Rock was Christ, 1 Cor. x. 4. When we celebrate the memorial of Christ's death, our hard and rocky hearts must be "rent"—the heart, and not the garments. That heart is harder than a rock, that will not "yield," that will not "melt," where Jesus Christ is "evidently set forth crucified." 3. The "graves were opened." This matter is not related so fully as our curiosity would wish; for the Scripture was not intended to gratify that; it should seem, the same earthquake that rent the rocks, "opened the graves," and many bodies of "saints which slept arose." Death to the saints is but the "sleep" of the body, and the "grave" the bed it "sleeps in;" they awoke by the power of the Lord Jesus, and ver. 53, came "out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into Jerusalem, the holy city, and appeared unto many."—Henry.

Burial of Christ.—See John xix. 38.

CHAP. XXVIII. The Resurrection.—Ver. 1—8. "Christ having put death to flight in the sepulchre, riseth by his own power, as straightway the angel witnesseth." [Beza.] —The Lord Jesus expired on the afternoon preceding the Sabbath: his body lay in the grave the remainder of that day, during all the Sabbath, and part of the day after, which began at sun-set: so that he arose early in the morning on the third day. "In the end of the Sabbath," or "after that the Sabbath was ended," and the day dawned on the first day of the week, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to see the sepulchre, and to examine whether it remained in the same state in which it had been left on the evening of his burial; knowing nothing of the guard that had been placed there. Probably the women mentioned by the other evangelists, followed some time after with the spices. But before any of them arrived, most astonishing events had taken place: a great earthquake had announced the approaching resurrection of Jesus, and probably thrown the soldiers into consternation; and then an angel appearing in a most glorious form, rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, and sat down on it; which affrighted the soldiers, so that they became senseless, as if they had been dead; but it is probable, that at length coming to themselves, they recovered courage enough to flee from the terrifying scene. In the mean time the Lord arose from the dead: re-uniting his human soul to his body by his own divine power, and leaving the sepulchre as a mighty conqueror over death and the grave.—When the women therefore came to the sepulchre, they found the stone rolled from the door.—It is probable that Mary Magdalene immediately returned to the city to inform the apostles, whilst the other women examined the sepulchre, and at length saw a vision of angels, one of whom addressed them in the most encouraging manner; bidding them not fear, for as they came to seek and honour Jesus who had been crucified, they had abundant cause for confidence and joy seeing he was indeed risen; and inviting them to examine the place where he had lain, calling him the Lord, that is, the Lord of angels as well as men. He then commanded them to go with all speed to inform the disciples of these particulars, that they might share the comfort of these glad tidings, and prepare to meet him in Galilee, where the whole company would have the inexpressible satisfaction of beholding him; and as he, an angel of God, had expressly told them these things, they must not doubt the truth of them, how extraordinary soever they might appear, or neglect to report them for fear of being deemed credulous visionaries. Upon this they immediately departed, with mingled affections of terror and joy, but the latter seems to have been the most prevalent; and they ran with haste to carry word to his disciples.—Scott.

The Great Commission.—Ver. 19—20. The apostles and preachers of the gospel, were ordered to baptize those who embraced the gospel, into the name (not names) of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This is a most irrefragable proof of the doctrine of the Trinity: that is, of the deity of the Son, and of the distinct personality and deity of the Holy Spirit: for it would be absurd to suppose, that a mere man, or creature, or a mere modus or quality of God, should be joined with the Father in the one name, into which all Christians are baptized. To be baptized into the name of any one, implies a professed dependence on him and devoted subjection to him; to be baptized therefore "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," implies a professed dependence on these three divine Persons, jointly and equally, and a devoting of ourselves to them as worshippers and servants. This is proper and obvious, upon the supposition of the mysterious unity of three co-equal persons in the unity of the Godhead; but not to be accounted for upon any other principles. Christianity is the religion of a sinner, who relies for salvation from wrath and sin, and all evil, on the mercy of the Father, through the person and atonement of the incarnate Son, and by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit; and who in consequence gives up himself to be the worshipper and servant of the triune Jehovah, in all his ordinances and commandments; that according to the ancient and excellent doxology, "Glory may be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost; as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be."—Baptism is an outward sign of that inward washing, or sanctification of the Spirit, which seals and evidences the believer's justification. When an adult is baptized, he avows his acceptance of this salvation, and makes this surrender of himself to the service of God his Saviour. When we bring our infant-offspring to be baptized, we express our earnest desire, that they may share the same benefits, and be the redeemed worshippers and servants of God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit: we renew our own profession of faith, and devotedness to this one God in three Persons; and we pledge ourselves to God and his church, to use proper means, to "bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" in hope of their being made partakers of the inward and spiritual grace of baptism. As far as these things are attended to, they have a most salutary effect both on parents and children; and this ordinance helps to keep up the remembrance of the principal doctrines of Christianity in all places where it is used.—There can be no reasonable doubt, but that the apostles and primitive Christians always administered baptism, in this very form: and it would be strange to infer their disobedience to so express a command of Christ, from the brevity with which such matters are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. Indeed it would be a most daring presumption in any man to alter it, as if he knew better than the Lord himself in what manner to administer the ordinance.—When our Lord had appointed baptism, and directed the apostles in respect of the subsequent instruction of their converts; (which demands our most careful and obedient consideration, as his parting command to his ministers;) being about to depart from them as to his visible presence, he said, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." He did not say, to death, or to eternity; for that might have been restricted personally to the apostles; but, to the end of the world: which includes all succeeding ministers, congregations, and disciples, in every age, and nation, even to the consummation of all things. He is with us, in the power of his protecting providence, by the influences of his teaching, sanctifying, and comforting Spirit, and in the communication of all spiritual blessings from the favour of his omnipresent deity; and we should realize him with us, in secret and in social worship and in our public assemblies.—Scott.

ST MARK.

ST PETER speaks of Marcus, and calls him "his son;" perhaps implying that Marcus was converted by his ministry, and served with him in the gospel (1 Pet. v. 13). This Marcus, or Mark, was undoubtedly the writer of the Gospel on which we now enter; but whether he was, or was not, a different person from John surnamed Mark, of whom we read in the Acts of the Apostles and in St Paul's epistles (Acts xii. 12; xiii. 5, 13; xv. 37-39; Col. iv. 10; 2 Tim. iv. 11), must remain doubtful, as the most able and laborious inquirers are divided in opinion on the subject. Some have considered St Mark as epitomising or abridging St Matthew; and he, doubtless, records many of the same facts, and a few of the same discourses and parables, which are found in St Matthew's Gospel: but he omits many things, and adds others; and he records some miracles much more fully than Matthew had done, and not without considerable variation: so that there is no reason to suppose that he intentionally took anything from Matthew, but that he wrote such things as were especially brought to his knowledge and impressed on his mind.

John Baptist's office, 1. Jesus is baptized, 9, tempted, 12, preacheth, 14, calleth Peter and others, 16, and cureth many, 32.

THE [a]beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, [c]the Son of God;

2 As it is written in the prophets, [e]Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.[1]

3 The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 John [g]did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance *for the [h]remission of sins.

5 And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all [k]baptized of him in the river of Jordan, [l]confessing their sins.

6 And John was clothed with camels' hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins, and he did eat locusts and wild honey;

7 And preached, saying, [o]There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.[2]

8 I indeed [p]have baptized you with water: but [q]he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.

9 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, [r]that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

10 And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens [t]opened, and the Spirit, like a dove, descending upon him:

11 And [u]there came a voice from heaven, saying, [x]Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

12 ¶ And immediately [y]the Spirit driveth him into the wilderness.

13 And he was there in the wilderness forty days [a]tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts:[3] [b]and the angels ministered unto him.

14 Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, [d]preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God,

15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and [f]the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

19 And when he had gone a little farther thence, he saw [m]James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

CHAP. I. PREACHING OF JOHN.—Ver. 3—6. In John's "preaching" and "baptizing" there was the "beginning" of the "gospel-doctrines and ordinances," and the first fruits of them. 1. He preached the "remission of sins," which is the great gospel-privilege; showed people their "need" of it, that they were "undone" without it, and that it might be obtained. 2. He preached "repentance," in order to it; he told people that there must be a renovation of their hearts and a reformation of their lives, that they must forsake their sins and turn to God, and upon those terms, and no other, their sins should be forgiven. "Repentance for the remission of sins" was what the apostles were commissioned to "preach to all nations," Luke xxiv. 47. 3. He preached Christ, and directed his hearers to "expect him" speedily to appear, and to "expect great things" from him. The preaching of Christ is pure gospel, and that was John Baptist's preaching, ver. 7, 8. Like a true gospel-minister he preaches, (1.) The great pre-eminence Christ is "advanced to;" so high, so great is Christ, that John, though one of the greatest that was born of women, thinks himself unworthy to be employed in the meanest office about him, even to "stoop down," and "untie his shoes." Thus industrious is he to give honour to him, and brings others to do so too. (2.) The great power Christ is invested with; He "comes after me" in time, but he is "mightier than I," mightier than the mighty ones of the earth, for he is able to "baptize with the Holy Ghost;" he can give the Spirit of God, and by him govern the spirits of men. (3.) The great "promise" Christ makes in his gospel to those who have repented, and have had their sins forgiven them; they shall be "baptized with" the Holy Ghost, shall be purified by his graces, and refreshed by his comforts. And, lastly, All those who received his doctrine, and submitted to his institution, he "baptized with water."

CHRIST'S BAPTISM.—Ver. 9—12. 1. See how humbly he owned God by coming to be "baptized of John;" and thus "it became him to fulfil all righteousness." Thus he "took upon him the likeness of sinful flesh," that though he was perfectly pure and unspotted, yet he was washed, as if he had been polluted; and thus "for our sakes he sanctified himself, that we also might be sanctified," and be baptized with him, John xvii. 19. 2. See how honourably God owned him, when he submitted to John's "baptism." Those who justify God, as they are said to do, who were "baptized with the baptism" of John, he will "glorify," Luke vii. 29, 30. (1.) He "saw the heavens opened;" thus he was owned to be the Lord from heaven, and had a glimpse of the glory and joy that were "set before him," and secured to him, as the recompense of his undertaking. Matthew saith, "The heavens were opened to him." Mark saith, "He saw them opened." Many have the heavens opened to receive them, but they do not see it; Christ had not only a clear foresight of his sufferings, but of his glory too. (2.) He "saw the Spirit, like a dove, descending upon him." Note, Then we may see heaven opened to us, when we perceive the Spirit "descending" and working upon us. God's good work in us is the surest evidence of his good will toward us, and his preparations for us. (3.) He heard a voice which was intended for his encouragement to proceed in his undertaking, and therefore it is here expressed as directed "to him, thou art my beloved Son." God lets him know [1.] That he "loved him" never the less for that "low" and "mean" estate to which he had now "humbled himself." "Though thus emptied and made of no reputation, yet he is my 'beloved Son' still." [2.] That he "loved him" much the more for that glorious and kind undertaking in which he had now "engaged himself." God is "well pleased" in him, as Referee of all matters in controversy between him and man; and so well pleased in him, as to be well pleased "with us" in him.

TEMPTATION OF JESUS.—See Matt. iv. 1.

CHRIST'S COMMAND OVER SATAN.—Ver. 25, 26. 1. Jesus commands. As he taught, so he healed, "with authority." Jesus "rebuked him;" he chid him and threatened him, imposed silence upon him; "Hold thy" peace; φιμωθητι—be muzzled. Christ has a muzzle for that unclean spirit when he fawns, as well as when he barks; such acknowledgments of him as this was, Christ disdains, so far is he from accepting them. Some confess Christ to be the "holy One of God," that under the cloak of that profession they may carry on malicious, mischievous designs; but their confession is doubly an abomination to the Lord Jesus, as it sues in his name for a license to sin, and shall therefore be put to silence and shame. But this is not all, he must not only "hold his peace," but he must "come out of the man;" this was it he dreaded—his being restrained from doing further mischief. But, 2. The unclean spirit yields, for there is no remedy; he "tore him," put him into a strong convulsion, that one could have thought he had been pulled in pieces; when he would not touch Christ, in fury at him he grievously disturbed this poor creature. Thus when Christ by his grace delivers poor souls out of the hands of Satan, it is not without a grievous toss and tumult in the soul; for that spiteful enemy will disquiet those whom he cannot destroy. He "cried with a loud voice," to frighten the spectators, and make himself seem terrible, as if he would have it thought that though he was conquered, he was but just conquered, and that he hoped to rally again, and recover his ground.

HEALING OF PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW.—Ver. 30—32. Observe, 1. When Christ had done that which "spread his fame" throughout all parts, he did not then sit still, as some think that they may lie in bed when their name is up. No, he continued to "do good," for that was it he aimed at, and not his own honour. Nay, those who are in and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.

32 ¶ And at even, when the sun did set,[8] they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34 And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils;[9] [k]and suffered not the devils to [‡]speak, because they knew him.

36 And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him.

37 And when they had found him, they said unto him, [m]All men seek for thee.

38 And he said unto them, [n]Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

40 ¶ And there came [s]a leper to him, beseeching him, and [t]kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, [u]If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

41 And Jesus, [x]moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, [y]I will; be thou clean.

42 And as soon as he had spoken, [z]immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

44 And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man:[10] but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

45 But he went out, [c]and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus [d]could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

[10] His enemies among the Jews would have laid hold of Him, and taken away His life; at least, they would have disturbed His ministry, and obstructed the work on which He was employed. That this was the ground of His caution and reserve, appears, among other passages, from John vii. 1.—LOCKE.

A late ingenious critic conceived it probable that the court might be covered with a kind of awning, fastened to the balustrade or parapet wall, and that the removing of this is only intended. — BOOTHROYD.

5 When Jesus [g]saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy [k]sins be forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts,

7 Why doth this man thus [m]speak blasphemies? [n]who can forgive sins but God only?

8 And immediately, when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9 Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, [r]Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins,[2] (he saith to the sick of the palsy,)

11 I say unto thee, [t]Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12 And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and [x]glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

16 And when the scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

reputation had need be busy and careful to keep it up. 2. When he "came out of the synagogue," where he had taught and healed with a divine authority, yet he conversed familiarly with the poor fishermen that attended him, and did not think it below him. Let the same mind, the same lowly mind, be in us, that was in him. 3. He went into Peter's house, probably invited thither to such entertainment as a poor fisherman could give him, and he accepted of it. The apostles left all for Christ; so far as that what they had should not hinder them from him; yet not so, but that they might use it for him. 4. He cured his mother-in-law, who was sick. Wherever Christ comes, he comes to do good, and will be sure to pay richly for his entertainment. Observe how complete the cure was; when "the fever left her," it did not, as usually, leave her weak, but the same hand that healed her strengthened her, so that she was able to "minister" to them; the cure is in order to that to fit for action, that we may minister to Christ, and to those that are his for his sake.

CURE OF THE LEPER.—Ver. 41—45. Affectionate professions of faith in Christ, and resignations to him, are the most prevailing petitions for mercy from him, and shall speed accordingly. 1. Christ was "moved with compassion." This is added here, in Mark, to show that Christ's power is employed by his pity for the relief of poor souls: that his reasons are fetched from within himself, and we have nothing in us to recommend us to his favour, but our misery makes us the objects of his mercy. And what he doth for us he doeth with all possible tenderness. 2. He "put forth his hand, and touched him." He "exerted" his power, and directed it to "this" creature. In healing souls Christ "toucheth them," 1 Sam. xx. 26. When the queen toucheth for the evil, she saith, I touch, God heals; but Christ toucheth and healeth too. 3. He said, "I will, be thou clean." Christ's power was put forth in and by "a word," to signify in what way Christ would ordinarily work spiritual cures; "He sends his word and heals," Ps. cvii. 20; John xvii. 17; xv. 3. The poor leper put an "if" upon the will of Christ; "If thou wilt;" but that doubt is soon put out of doubt. "I will." Christ most readily "wills" favours to those that most readily refer themselves to his will. He was confident of Christ's "power;" Thou "canst make me clean;" and Christ will show how much his power is drawn out into act by the faith of his people, and therefore speaks the word as one having authority, "Be thou clean." And power accompanied this word, and the cure was perfect in an instant; "Immediately his leprosy" vanished, and there remained no more sign of it.—Henry.

CHAP. II. CURE OF THE PARALYTIC.—Ver. 3—12. We find from Luke, that certain Pharisees and Scribes had come from all the cities and towns, far and wide, and even from Jerusalem; doubtless to watch our Lord, and to seek for matter of accusation against him. And whilst he was instructing the people, four persons came, bringing on a bed a man so enfeebled by the palsy, that he could not be otherwise conveyed. Probably he despaired of a cure from any other quarter, but, expecting it from Jesus, he was desirous of being carried to him, and his friends were equally willing to assist him; though it would be laborious to them, and painful to him. And when they could not come into the presence of Christ, because of the multitude, being unwilling to postpone the case, lest his departure should again deprive them of the opportunity, they conveyed the bed to the top of the house. Probably this was low, and perhaps only one story high, and there was some way up on the outside: but though there might be also an opening in the roof, yet it seems not to have been wide enough to let the bed through. They therefore uncovered the roof, and even broke up what was in the way. Thus they let him down through the tiling in his couch, and brought him into the presence of Jesus. Some think, judging from the sight of the houses, and acquaintance with the customs in those Eastern countries, that he was let down through the battlements, on the outside of the house, into the court-yard: but the language of the evangelists seems incapable of this meaning; and any injury done to the roof, by breaking it up, might be repaired at a small expense. When, however, Jesus saw their faith, (in these evident effects of it, as well as by his intimate knowledge of their hearts,) he did not at first remove the man's disorder; but, addressing him in the most condescending and affectionate manner, authoritatively pronounced his sins forgiven. This afforded the Scribes the occasion for which they were waiting; and though they did not openly declare their sentiments, they inwardly thought him guilty of blasphemy, in presuming to do that which was the prerogative of God only. But our Lord soon showed them, that he possessed divine perfection and authority; for "he perceived in his spirit," or by his own inward knowledge of their hearts, the thoughts or reasonings, which inwardly employed them: and he inquired, "Whether it were easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee, or to say, Arise, take up thy bed and walk?" Divine authority was requisite actually to forgive sins; and omnipotence was needful for the immediate and complete removal of that terrible disorder. Having therefore put the matter upon that issue, he proved his authority, as the Son of man, even on earth in his state of humiliation, to forgive sins, by commanding the paralytic to arise, and take up his bed and carry it to his house: and such power accompanied his word, that the man was enabled to do this in the sight of the multitude; so that they were all astonished, gave praise to God on his behalf, and acknowledged that they had never seen it on this fashion before. Thus the man, in his miraculous cure, possessed the fullest evidence that his sins were pardoned; every one,

The Sabbath.—Ver. 27. Let us consider whom the Sabbath was "made for; it was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." This we had not in Matthew. The Sabbath is a sacred and divine institution; but we must receive and embrace it as a privilege and a benefit, not as a task and a drudgery. First, God never designed it to be an imposition upon us, and therefore we must not make it so to ourselves. Man was not made for the Sabbath; for he was made a day before the Sabbath was instituted. Man was made for God, and for his honour and service, and he must rather die than deny him; but he was not made for the Sabbath, so as to be tied up by the law of it, from that which is necessary to the support of his life. Secondly, God did design it to be an advantage to us, and so we must make it and improve it. He made it for man. 1. He had some regard to our bodies in the institution, that they might rest, and not be tired out with the constant business of this world; Deut. v. 14, that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest. Now he that intended the sabbath-rest for the repose of our bodies, certainly never intended it should restrain us, in a case of necessity, from fetching in the necessary supports of the body; it must be construed so as not to contradict itself—for edification, and not for destruction. 2. He had much more regard to our souls. The Sabbath was made a day of rest, only in order to its being a day of holy work, a day of communion with God, a day of praise and thanksgiving; and the rest from worldly business is therefore necessary, that we may closely apply ourselves to this work, and spend the whole time in it, in public and in private; but then time is allowed us for that which is necessary to the fitting of our bodies for the service of our souls in God's service, and the enabling of them to keep pace with them in that work.—Henry.

CHAP. III. Healing of the Man with the Withered Hand.—Ver. 6. Christ dealt very kindly with the patient; he bid him "stretch forth his hand," and it was immediately "restored." Now, 1. Christ has hereby taught us to go on with resolution in the way of our duty, how violent soever the opposition is, that we meet with in it. We must deny ourselves sometimes in our ease, pleasure, and convenience, rather than give offence even to those who causelessly take it, but we must not deny ourselves the satisfaction of serving God, and doing good, though offence may unjustly be taken at it None could be more tender of giving offence than Christ; yet rather than send this poor man away uncured, he would venture offending all the Scribes and Pharisees that compassed him about. 2. He hath hereby given us a specimen of the cures wrought by his grace upon poor souls; our hands are spiritually withered, the powers of our souls weakened by sin, and disabled for that which is good. The great healing-day, is the Sabbath, and the healing-place the synagogue; the healing-power is that of Christ. The gospel-command is like this recorded here; and the command is rational and just, though our hands are withered, and we cannot of ourselves stretch them forth, we must attempt it, must, as well as we can, lift them up to God in prayer, lay hold on Christ and eternal life, and employ them in good works; and if we do our endeavour, power goes along with the word of Christ, he effects the cure. Though our hands be withered, yet, if we will not offer to stretch them out, it is our own fault that we are not healed; but if we do, and are healed, Christ and his power and grace must have all the glory.—Henry.

Appointment of the Apostles.—See Matt. x. 2.

Boanerges.—Ver. 17. The surname of Boanerges, or sons of thunder, given to James and John, doubtless related to the energy and efficacy, with which they addressed men's consciences, to awaken their fears, and to show them their need of mercy and salvation. —"Christ seems to have given them this name, from a foresight of the heat and zeal of their temper, of which they quickly gave an instance, in their desire to call down fire from heaven to consume the Samaritans. Hence we find in the Acts, Peter and John are the chief speakers and actors in the defence and propagation of the gospel: and the zeal of James and Peter seems to be the reason why the one was slain by Herod, and the other imprisoned, in order to the like execution." [Whitby.]—It is evident that John, as well as James, was naturally of a warm and sanguine disposition; but when this was greatly sanctified, it constituted that fervent, zealous, and affectionate temper, which appears in his writings. Yet they, who speak of his loving spirit, (I suppose, because he so much inculcates love,) as if he had been more lenient, indulgent, and incapable of giving pain by sharp reproofs and awful warnings, than the other apostles, seem to have totally mistaken his character; for no part of the Scripture is more suited to give offence to all unsound professors of Christianity, than his first epistle; or even to put inconsistent or negligent Christians to a stand, and make them question their own sincerity.—Scott.

The parable of the sower, 3; the meaning thereof, 14. Of the seed growing secretly, 26; and of the mustard-seed, 30.

AND [a]he began again to teach by the sea-side: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, [b]so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea;[l] and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.

2 And he taught them many things by parables, and said unto them [d]in his doctrine,

3 Hearken; Behold, [f]there went out a sower to sow:

4 And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way-side, [g]and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up.

5 And some fell on [h]stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

6 But when [i]the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away.

7 And some [l]fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8 And others [m]fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred.

9 And he said unto them, [o]He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

10 ¶ And when he was alone, they that were about him, with the twelve, asked of him the parable.

11 And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without,[z] all these things are done in parables:

12 That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand;[3] lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13 And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?[4]

14 ¶ The sower soweth [r]the word.

15 And these are they by the way-side, where the word is sown; but, when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17 And [d]have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time: afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18 And these are they which are sown among thorns; such as hear the word,

19 And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lust of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20 And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

21 ¶ And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a *bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick?

22 For [o]there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested;[5] neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

24 And he saith unto them, [q]Take heed what ye hear. With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you; and unto you that hear shall more be given.

25 For he that hath, to him shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

26 ¶ And he said, [u]So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

27 And should sleep,[6] and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

28 For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29 But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.

30 ¶ And he said, [d]Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

very well that he was then in his element;) they not only stood without, having no desire to come in and hear him, but they sent in a message to call him out to them, as if he must leave his work to hearken to their impertinences. 2. The respect which Christ showed to his spiritual kindred upon this occasion. Now, as at other times, he put a comparative neglect upon his mother, which seemed purposely designed to obviate and prevent the extravagant respect which men in after times would be apt to pay her. Our respect ought to be guided and governed by Christ; now, the virgin Mary, or Christ's mother, is not equalled with, but postponed to, ordinary believers, on whom Christ here puts a superlative honour. He looked upon those that "sat about" him, and pronounced those of them that not only heard, but did, the will of God, to be to him as "his mother, and sister, and brother;" as much esteemed, loved, and cared for, as his nearest relations. This is a good reason why we should "honour those that fear the Lord," and choose them for our people; why we should be not hearers of the word only, but doers of the work, that we may share with the saints in this honour. Surely it is good to be akin to those who are thus nearly allied to Christ, and to have fellowship with those that have fellowship with Christ; and wo to those who hate and persecute Christ's kindred, that are "his bone and his flesh," every one "resembling the children of a King," (see Judg. viii. 18, 19;) for he will with jealousy plead their cause, and avenge their blood.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. Parable of the Sower.—See Matt. xiii. 1.

Usefulness.—Ver. 21—25. It concerns those who hear the word of the gospel, to mark what they hear, and to "make a good" use of it, because their weal or wo depends upon it; what he had said before he saith again, "If any man hath ears to hear, let him hear." Let him give the gospel of Christ a fair hearing; but that is not enough, it is added, "Take heed what ye hear," and give a due regard to that which ye do hear; "Consider what ye hear;" so Dr Hammond reads it. Note, What we hear doth us no good, unless we consider it; those especially that are to teach others, must themselves be very observant of the things of God; must take notice of the message they are to deliver, that they may be exact. We must likewise "take heed what we hear," by proving all things, that we may "hold fast that which is good." We must be cautious, and stand upon our guard, lest we be imposed upon. To enforce this caution, consider, 1. As we deal with God, God will deal with us. So Dr Hammond explains these words, "'With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you.' If ye be faithful servants to him, he will be a faithful Master to you: 'with the upright he will show himself upright.'" 2. As we improve the talents we are intrusted with, we shall increase them; if we make use of the knowledge we have, for the glory of God and the benefit of others, it shall sensibly grow, as stock in trade doth by being turned: "Unto you that hear, shall more be given: to you that have, it shall be given." If the disciples deliver that to the church which they have "received of the Lord," they shall be led more into the "secret of the Lord." Gifts and graces multiply by being exercised; and God has promised to bless the "hand of the diligent." 3. If we do not use, we lose, what we have; "From him that hath not," that doeth no good with what he hath, and so hath it in vain, is as if he had it not, "shall be taken even that he hath." Burying a talent is the betraying of a trust, and amounts to a forfeiture; and gifts and graces rust for want of wearing.—Henry.

Religion a Progressive Principle.—Ver. 26—29. This parable, which is not found in any other of the gospels, represents the manner in which the kingdom of God gains ground in the world. In this respect, he who preaches "the word of the truth of the gospel," may be likened to a husbandman, that sows his seed, and then leaves it; as knowing that he can do nothing more towards a crop. Accordingly he sleeps by night, and rises in the morning to attend on his other business; not being solicitous about the seed, as if the increase depended on his constant attention to it. In the meantime it springs up, and by imperceptible degrees grows to maturity; and he is so far from managing the process, that he cannot comprehend it: for, the earth, made fruitful by the Creator's power and goodness, and receiving the influence of the sun, rain, and varying seasons, as ordered by him, spontaneously produceth the increase. A small blade first appears; and, during the changes of the weather, it sometimes is more flourishing, and at others it seems to wither: yet at length it ears, fills, and ripens; and the husbandman gathers in the crop, which God hath given him as the increase of his seed sown.—Thus ministers sow the good seed of the word, and use other appointed means of obtaining success; but God alone gives the increase. The minister therefore should diligently do his duty, but with resignation, composure, and dependence on God. When he has the opportunity of watching the effects of his own labours, he finds his hopes and fears continually fluctuate: he meets with disappointments which he can by no means prevent, and success where he had given up the hope of it; but much of the good done will generally be unknown at the time, and perhaps become visible after his death. However, the labour of that man who is faithful and diligent will not be in vain: the seed will find hearts prepared by the grace of God to receive it; and under the influences of the Spirit it will spring up; and from convictions of sin and inquiries after salvation, it will grow up into a more solid judgment, greater experience, humility, and simplicity; and thus proceed to fruitfulness in good works. In this manner souls when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32 But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

37 And [p]there arose a [q]great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and say unto him, Master, [t]carest thou not that we perish?

39 And he arose, and [x]rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

will be prepared for heaven; and when their measure of services and trials are completed, and they are made ready for the glory and felicity intended for them; the Lord will gather them as the wheat of his harvest into his garner; and they, who have been the instruments of their conversion and sanctification, will at last glorify God for the blessed increase of their patient labours, which perhaps at the time they concluded to be almost entirely unsuccessful.—Scott.

INCIDENTS OF THE VOYAGE.—Ver. 35—41. Observe, 1. It was "the same day" that he preached out of a ship, "when the even was come." When he had been "labouring in the word and doctrine" all day, instead of reposing himself, he exposeth himself, to teach us not to think of a constant remaining rest till we come to heaven. The end of a toil may perhaps be but the beginning of a toss. But observe, the ship that Christ made his pulpit, is taken under his special protection, and though in danger, cannot sink. What is used for Christ, he will take particular care of. 2. He himself proposed putting to sea at night, because he would lose no time; "Let us pass over to the other side;" for we shall find, in the next chapter, he has work to do there. Christ went about doing good, and no difficulties in his way should hinder him; thus industrious we should be in serving him and our generation according to his will. 3. They did not put to sea, till "they had sent away the multitude," that is, had given to each of them that which they came for, and answered all their requests; for he sent none home, complaining that they had attended him in vain. Or, they sent them away with a solemn blessing; for Christ came into the world, not only to pronounce, but to command, and to give, the blessing. 4. They took him "even as he was," that is, in the same dress that he was in when he preached, without any cloak to throw over him, which he ought to have had, to keep him warm, when he went to sea at night, especially after preaching. 5. The storm was so great, that the ship was "full of water," not by springing a leak, but perhaps partly with the shower, for the word here signifies a tempest of wind with rain; however, the ship being little, the waves beat into it so that "it was full."—Henry.

CHRIST IN THE STORM.—See Matt. viii. 23

CHAP. V. THE DEMONIAC.—Ver. 1—10. "No man could bind him," as it is requisite, both for their own good, and for the safety of others, that those who are distracted should be. Not only cords would not hold him, but "chains" and "fetters of iron" would not. Very deplorable is the case of such as "need to be" thus "bound," and of all miserable people in this world they are most to be pitied; but his case was worst of all, in whom the devil was so strong, that he could not be bound. This sets forth the sad condition of those souls in which the devil has dominion; those children of disobedience, in whom that unclean spirit works. Some notoriously wilful sinners are like this madman; all are herein like the horse and the mule, that they need to be held in with bit and bridle; but some are like the wild ass, that will not be so held. The commands and curses of the law are as "chains" and "fetters," to restrain sinners from their wicked courses; but they "break those bands in sunder," and it is an evidence of the power of the devil in them. He was a terror and torment to himself and to all about him. The devil is a cruel master to those that are led captive by him, a perfect tyrant; this wretched creature was "night and day in the mountains and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones," either bemoaning his own deplorable case, or in a rage and indignation against Heaven. Men in frenzies often wound and destroy themselves; what is a man when reason is *de*throned, and Satan *en*throned? The worshippers of Baal in their fury "cut themselves," like this madman in his. The voice of God is, "Do thyself no harm;" the voice of Satan is, "Do thyself all the harm thou canst;" yet God's word is despised, and Satan's regarded. Perhaps his "cutting of himself with stones" was only cutting his feet with the sharp stones he run barefoot upon.

THE DEMONS.—Ver. 9. "My name is Legion, for we are many;" a "legion" of soldiers among the Romans consisted, some say, of six thousand men, others, of twelve thousand and five hundred; but the number of a legion with them, like that of a regiment with us, was not always the same. Now, this intimates, that the devils, the infernal powers, are, 1. Military powers; a legion is a number of soldiers in arms. The devils war against God and his glory, Christ and his gospel, men and their holiness and happiness. They are such as we are to "resist," and "wrestle against," Eph. vi. 12. 2. That they are numerous, he owns, or rather he boasts—"We are many;" as if he hoped to be "too many" for Christ himself to deal with. What multitudes of apostate spirits were there, and all enemies to God and man; when here were a legion posted to keep garrison in one poor, wretched creature, against Christ! Many there are that rise up against us. 3. That they are "unanimous;" there are "many" devils, and yet but "one legion," engaged in the same wicked cause; and therefore that cavil of the Pharisees, which supposed Satan to cast out Satan, and to be divided against himself, was altogether groundless. It was not one of this legion that betrayed the rest, for they all said, as one man, "What have I to do with thee?" 4. That they are very powerful; who can stand before a "legion?" We are not a match for our spiritual enemies, in our own strength; but "in the Lord, and in the power of his might," we shall be able to "stand against them," though there are legions of them. 5. That there is order among them, as there is in a "legion;" there are "principalities and powers, and rulers of the darkness of this world," which supposes that there are those of a lower rank; the devil and his angels;

41 And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talitha, cumi; which is, being interpreted, [q]Damsel, (I say unto thee,) arise.

42 And straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment.

43 And he charged them straitly that no man should know it;[10] and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

2 And when the sabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many hearing him were astonished, saying, [c]From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3 Is not this the [e]carpenter,[1] the son of Mary, the brother of James, [f]and Joses, and of [g]Juda, and [h]Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him.

4 But Jesus said unto them, [k]A prophet is not without honour,[2] but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

5 And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.

6 And he marvelled because of their unbelief. [n]And he went round about the villages, teaching.

7 ¶ And he called unto him the twelve, and began to send them forth by [p]two and two; and gave them [q]power over unclean spirits;

8 And commanded them that they should take nothing for their journey, save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no [*]money in their purse:

9 But be shod with sandals; and not put on two coats.

10 And he said unto them, In what place soever ye enter into an house, there abide till ye depart from that place.

11 And [u]whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, shake off the dust under your feet for a testimony against them. Verily I say unto you, [x]It shall be more tolerable for Sodom [†]and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for that city.

12 And they went out, and [z]preached that men should repent.

14 ¶ And king Herod heard of him; (for his name was spread abroad;) and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

15 Others said, That [c]it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.[4]

16 But when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

THE WOMAN'S FAITH.—Ver. 28. She said within herself, though it doth not appear that she was encouraged by any preceding instance to say it, "If I may but touch his clothes, I shall be whole." She believed that he cured, not as a Prophet, by virtue derived from God, but as the Son of God, by a virtue inherent in himself. Her case was such as she could not in modesty tell him publicly, as others did their grievances, and therefore a private cure was that she wished for, and her faith was suited to her case. She came in the crowd behind him, and with much ado got to "touch his garment," and immediately she felt the cure wrought. The flux of blood was dried up, and she felt herself perfectly well all over her, as well as ever she was in her life, in an instant—all at once; as for God, his work is perfect. Note, Those whom Christ heals of the disease of sin, that bloody issue, cannot but experience in themselves an universal change for the better.—Henry.

RAISING OF THE DAUGHTER OF JAIRUS.—Ver. 35—43. The preceding transaction would occasion delay, and increase the anxiety of Jairus: but this trial was much greater, when messengers came from his house to inform him, that his daughter was dead; and to observe to him, that it was needless to give the Teacher any further trouble. When Jesus heard this, he exhorted Jairus not to fear his daughter's recovery, but to believe assuredly that he was able to restore her. He then dismissed the multitude, and even all his disciples, except Peter, James, and John; that he might be attended by a competent number of witnesses, and yet keep at the utmost distance from ostentation, in that display of his power which he was about to make. When he arrived at the house, he found the family in great distress and confusion: the mourners and minstrels were already called in, as it was customary on such occasions; and whilst some played mournful tunes, others vented the most doleful lamentations. But Jesus reproved them, bidding them not weep, and assuring them that she was not dead, so as to continue long in that state; but was only fallen into a sleep, from which he was about to awake her. But they, knowing that she was really dead, treated his words with contempt, and indecently laughed him to scorn; though they must often have heard of his miracles, and were acquainted with the wisdom and holiness of his character! He therefore put them all out of the room, after he had drawn from them this attestation of the certainty of her death; and, having none with him but the parents of the damsel and his three apostles, he took hold of her hand, and said aloud, as having power over death and the spirits of the dead, "Talitha, cumi," "or, damsel, arise;" and immediately she arose and walked, to the inexpressible astonishment of the spectators, and doubtless the exceeding joy and gratitude of her before afflicted parents. Our Lord then commanded them not to mention the circumstance to any person; as it was sure to be sufficiently known, and in fact the fame of it soon spread abroad very widely. He also directed them to give her something to eat, by which it appeared, that she was recovered to complete health; and it was intimated, that her life must be preserved as before, by ordinary means, being the same as that of others here on earth, and not like that to which we shall be restored by the general resurrection.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. DISPARAGEMENT OF JESUS.—Ver. 1—4. They studied to disparage him, and to raise prejudices in the minds of the people against him, notwithstanding. All this "wisdom," and all these "mighty works," shall be of no account, because he had had a home education, had never travelled, nor been at any university, or bred up at the feet of any of their doctors. "Is not this the carpenter?" In Matthew they upbraid him with being the carpenter's son, his supposed father Joseph being of that trade. But, it seems, they could say further, "Is not this the carpenter?" Our Lord Jesus, it is probable, employing himself in that business with his father, before he entered upon his public ministry, at least, sometimes in journey-work. 1. He would thus humble himself, and make himself of no reputation, as one that had taken upon him the form of a servant, and came to minister. Thus low did our Redeemer stoop, when he came to redeem us out of our low estate. 2. He would thus teach us to abhor idleness, and to find ourselves something to do in this world; and rather to take up with mean and laborious employments, and such as no more is to be got by than a bare livelihood, than indulge ourselves in sloth. Nothing is more pernicious for young people than to get a habit of sauntering. The Jews had a good rule for this—that their young men, who were designed for scholars, were yet bred up to some trade, as Paul was a tent-maker, that they might have some business to fill up their time with, and, if need were, to get their bread with. 3. He would thus put an honour upon despised mechanics, and encourage those who eat the labour of their hands, though great men look upon them with contempt. Another thing they upbraided him with, was, the meanness of his relations; "'He is the son of Mary;' his 'brethren' and 'sisters' are here 'with us;' we know his family and kindred;" and therefore, though they were "astonished" at his doctrine, yet they were "offended" at his person, were prejudiced against him, and looked upon him with contempt; and for that reason would not receive his doctrine, though ever so well recommended. May we think that if they had not known his pedigree, but he had dropped among them from the clouds, without father, without mother, and without 18 For John had said unto Herod, [k]It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.

19 Therefore [l]Herodias had [‡]a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not;

20 For Herod [m]feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and [§]observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, [n]and heard him gladly.

21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod, on [p]his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;

22 And when [q]the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod, and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he sware unto her, Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.[5]

24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, [u]The head of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me, by and by in a charger, the head of John the Baptist.

26 And the king [x]was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately [a]the king sent [‖]an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison,

28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his disciples heard of it, [b]they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

30 ¶ And [c]the apostles gathered themselves together[6] unto Jesus, and told him all things, [d]both what they had done, and what they had taught.

31 And he said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32 And they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

33 And the people saw them departing, and many [f]knew him, and ran a-foot thither[7] out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him.

34 ¶ And Jesus, when he came out, [g]saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, [h]because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: [i]and he began to teach them many things.

35 And when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed;

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and said unto them, [m]Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, [n]Shall we go and buy two hundred *pennyworth[8] of bread, and give them to eat?

38 He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, [o]Five, and two fishes.

39 And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40 And they sat down in ranks,[9] by hundreds, and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, [r]he looked up to heaven, and [s]blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42 And they did all eat, and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

45 And [x]straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before †unto [y]Bethsaida, while he sent away the people.

46 And when he had sent them away, he [z]departed into a mountain to pray.

47 And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land.

48 And [a]he saw them toiling in rowing: (for the wind was contrary unto them:) and about [b]the fourth watch of the night [c]he cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and [d]would have passed by them.

49 But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they [e]supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out:

50 (For they all saw him, and were troubled:) and immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, Be of good cheer: [f]it is I; be not afraid.

51 And he went up unto them into the ship; [g]and the wind ceased: [h]and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

52 For [i]they considered not[10] the miracle of the loaves: for [k]their heart was hardened.

53 ¶ And when they had passed over, they came into [l]the land of Gennesaret, and drew to the shore.

54 And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they [m]knew him, descent, they would have entertained him with any more respect? Truly, no; for in Judea, where this was not known, that was made an objection against him, John ix. 29. "As for this fellow, we know not from whence he is." Obstinate unbelief will never want excuses.

A Guilty Conscience.—Ver. 14. 1. Where there is an idle faith, there is commonly a working fancy. The people said, It is a prophet risen from the dead; Herod said, It is "John Baptist risen from the dead." It seems by this, that the "rising of a prophet from the dead," to do "mighty works," was a thing expected, and was thought neither impossible nor improbable, and it was now readily suspected when it was not true; but afterward, when it was true concerning Christ, and a truth undeniably evidenced, yet then it was obstinately gainsaid and denied. Those who most wilfully disbelieve the truth, are commonly most credulous of errors and fancies. 2. They who fight against the cause of God, will find themselves baffled, even when they think themselves conquerors; they cannot gain their point, for the word of the Lord endures for ever. They who rejoiced when the witnesses were slain, fretted as much when, in three or four days, they "rose again" in their successors, Rev. xi. 10, 11. The impenitent, unreformed, sinner, that escapeth the sword of Jehu, shall Elisha slay. 3. A guilty conscience needs no accuser or tormentor but itself. Herod charges himself with the murder of John, which perhaps no one else dare charge him with; I beheaded him; and the terror of it made him imagine that Christ was John risen. He feared John while he lived, and now, when he thought he had got clear of him, fears him ten times worse when he is dead. One might as well be haunted with ghosts and furies, as with the horrors of an accusing conscience; those, therefore, who would keep an undisturbed peace, must keep an undefiled conscience, Acts xxiv. 16. 4. There may be the terrors of strong conviction, where there is not the truth of a saving conversion. This Herod, who had this notion concerning Christ, afterward sought to kill him, Luke xiii. 31, and did set him at nought, Luke xxiii. 11; so that he will not be persuaded, though it be "by one risen from the dead;" no, not by a John the Baptist risen from the dead.

Herod's Fatal Oath.—See Matt. xiv. 8.

Miracle of Increase.—See Matt. xiv. 14.

The Banquet Itself.—Ver. 36. 1. The provision was ordinary. Here were no rarities, no varieties, though Christ, if he had pleased, could have furnished his table with them; but thus he would teach us to be content with food convenient for us, and not to be desirous of dainties. If we have for necessity, it is no matter though we have not for delight and curiosity. God, in love, gives "meat for our hunger;" but, in wrath, gives [illegible] Ps. lxxviii. 18. The promise to them that fear the Lord is, that verily they shall be fed; he doth not say they shall be feasted. If Christ and his disciples took up with mean things, surely we may. 2. The guests were orderly; for they "sat down by companies upon the green grass," ver. 39, they "sat down in ranks by hundreds and by fifties," ver. 40, that the provision might the more easily and regularly be distributed among them; for God is the God of order, and not of confusion. Thus care was taken that every one should have enough, and none be overlooked, nor any have more than was fitting. 3. A blessing was craved upon the meat; "He looked up to heaven, and blessed." Christ did not call one of his disciples to crave a blessing, but did it himself; ver. 41, and by virtue of this blessing the bread strangely multiplied, and so did the fishes, for they did "all eat, and were filled," though they were to the number of "five thousand," ver. 42—44. This miracle was significant, and shows that Christ came into the world to be the great Feeder as well as the great Healer; not only to restore, but to preserve and nourish spiritual life; and in him there is enough for all that come to him, enough to fill the soul, to fill the treasures; none are sent empty away from Christ but those that come to him full of themselves. 4. Care was taken of the fragments that remained, with which they filled "twelve baskets." Though Christ had bread enough at command, he would hereby teach us, not to make waste of any of God's good creatures; remembering how many there are that do want, and that we know not but we may some time or other want such fragments as we throw away.

Jesus Walking on the Sea.—Ver. 47—50.—See also Matt. xiv. 25. Christ made them a kind visit upon the water. He could have checked the winds, where he was, or have sent an angel to their relief; but he chose to help them in the most endearing manner possible, and therefore came to them himself. 1. He did not come till the "fourth watch of the night," not till after three o'clock in the morning; but then he came. Note, If Christ's visits of his people be deferred long, yet at length he will come; and their extremity is his opportunity to appear for them so much the more seasonably. Though the salvation tarry, yet we must wait for it; "at the end it shall speak," in the fourth watch of the night, "and not lie." 2. He came, walking upon the waters. The sea was now tossed with waves, and yet Christ came, walking upon it; for though the "floods lift up their voice, the Lord on high is mightier," Ps. xciii. 3, 4. No difficulties can obstruct Christ's gracious appearances for his people, when the set time is come. He will either find, or force, a way through the most tempestuous sea, for their deliverance, Ps. xlii. 7, 8. 3. He "would have passed by them;" that is, he set his face, and steered his course, as if he would have gone further, and took no notice of them; this was to awaken them to call to him. Note, Providence, when it is acting for [illegible] for the succour of God's people, [illegible]

CHAP. VII.

The Pharisees find fault with the disciples for eating with unwashen hands, 1. Meat defileth not a man, 14.

THEN came together unto him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2 And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with *defiled (that is to say, with unwashen) hands, they found fault.

3 For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands †oft, eat not, holding [c]the tradition of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market,[1] [d]except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and ‡pots, brasen vessels, and of §tables.

5 Then the Pharisees and scribes asked him, Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

6 He answered and said unto them, [f]Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people [h]honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7 Howbeit, in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the [k]commandments of men.

8 For, laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

9 And he said unto them, [m]Full well ye ‖reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For Moses said,[2] [n]Honour thy father and thy mother; and, [o]Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death:

11 But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to say, A gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free.

12 And ye suffer him no more[3] to do ought for his father or his mother;

13 Making [q]the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many such like things do ye.

14 ¶ And when he had called all the people unto him, he said unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and understand:

15 There is nothing from without a man that entering into him can defile him: [u]but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man.

16 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 And when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable.

18 And he saith unto them, [z]Are ye so without understanding also? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him;

19 Because [a]it entereth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats?

20 And he said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man.

21 For from within, [c]out of the heart of men, proceed [d]evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

22 Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, [e]an evil eye, blasphemy, [f]pride, [g]foolishness:[4]

23 All these evil things come from within, and [h]defile the man.

24 ¶ And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, [i]and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid.

25 For a certain woman, [n]whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and [o]fell at his feet;

26 (The woman was a *Greek, [p]a Syrophenician[5] by nation;) and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

27 But Jesus said unto her, [q]Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.

28 And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: [r]yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.

29 And he said unto her, For this saying go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

31 ¶ And again, departing from the coast of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coast of [x]Decapolis.

32 And they [y]bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech,[6] and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

33 And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears,[7] and he spit, and touched his tongue;

34 And [s]looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, [e]Ephphatha, that is, [d]Be opened.

and regarded not their case. They thought that "he would," but we may be sure that he would not, "have passed by them." 4. They were frightened at the sight of him, supposing him to have been an apparition; "They all saw him and were troubled, thinking it had been some demon, or evil genius, that haunted them, and raised this storm. We often perplex and frighten ourselves with phantasms, the creatures of our own fancy and imagination.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. PHARISAICAL CEREMONIES.—Ver. 3, 4. This evangelist gives a more particular account of these traditional washings than Matthew did. The Pharisees and other Jews used not to eat, except they washed their hands oft or diligently, "with their fist," or "to the wrist," or "to the elbow;" (some understand it one way, and some another,) being afraid of having inadvertently contracted defilement. When they returned from the markets or places of public resort, they would not eat, except they washed, or were baptized, as it is in the original; and they had received, and very tenaciously held many such things, as the washing, or baptisms, of cups, pots, and even of their tables, or rather beds, the couches on which they reclined to meat. If we suppose that they always bathed the whole body, after they returned from the market, which is not very probable, yet we cannot conceive that they plunged their couches in water also. As the Pharisees only blamed Christ's disciples for eating with unwashen hands, so it seems undeniable that, by the words baptize and baptisms a partial application of water was intended in this, as well as in several other places.—"A man shall wash his hands in the morning, so that it shall suffice him for the day; and he shall not need to wash his hands as oft as he eats; which holds, if he do not avert his mind another way, (that is, go abroad, or meddle with business, or go to the market, &c.;) but if he do so, he is bound to wash his hands as oft as there is need of washing." [Maimonides in Hammond.] This washing is called being baptized, not the hands being baptized, but the persons being baptized. It is intimated here that these observances were not peculiar to the Pharisees, but general among the Jews, through the influence of the scribes and elders: and this shows the conduct of our Lord and his disciples, in this protest, the more remarkable. The rites of the ceremonial law they strictly observed; and they paid the required tribute, lest they should give offence: but as the traditions of the elders undermined the authority of the divine law, our Lord himself openly refused to comply with them, and taught his disciples to do the same.—Scott.

THE TRIAL OF HER FAITH.—Ver. 27, 28. Jesus said unto her, "'Let the children first be filled;' let the Jews have all the miracles wrought for them that they have occasion for, who are in a particular manner God's chosen people; and let not that which was intended for them be thrown to those who are not of God's family, and who have not that knowledge of him, and interest in him, which they have, and who are as dogs in comparison with them, vile and profane, and who are as dogs to them, snarling at them, spiteful toward them, and ready to worry them." Note, Where Christ knows the faith of poor supplicants to be strong, he sometimes delights to try it, and put it to the stretch. But his saying, "Let the children first be filled," intimates that there was mercy in reserve for the Gentiles, and not far off; for the Jews began already to be surfeited with the gospel of Christ, and some of them had desired him to "depart out of their coasts." The children begin to play with their meat, and their leavings, their loathings, would be a feast for the Gentiles. The apostles went by this rule, "Let the children first be filled," let the Jews have the first offer; and if their full souls loathe this honeycombe, "Lo we turn to the Gentiles!" Note, The turn she gave to this word of Christ, which made against her and her improvement of it, to make for her. She said, "'Yes, Lord,' I own it is true that the 'children's bread' ought not to be cast to the dogs; but they were never denied the 'crumbs' of that bread, nay, it belongs to them, and they are allowed a place 'under the table,' that they may be ready to receive them. I ask not for a loaf, no, nor for a morsel, only for a 'crumb;' do not refuse me that." This she speaks, not as undervaluing the mercy, or making light of it in itself, but magnifying the abundance of miraculous cures with which she heard the Jews were feasted, in comparison with which a single cure was but as a crumb. Gentiles do not come in crowds as the Jews do; "I come alone." Perhaps she heard of Christ feeding five thousand lately at once, after which, even when they had gathered up the fragments, there could not but be some crumbs left for the dogs.

CURE OF THE DEAF MUTE.—Ver. 34—36. Jesus said, Ephphatha; that is, Be opened. This was nothing that looked like spell or charm, such as they used, who had "familiar spirits," who "peeped and muttered," Isa. viii. 19. Christ speaks as one having authority, and power went along with the word. "Be opened" served both parts of the cure; "Let the ears be opened, let the lips be opened, let him hear and speak freely, and let the restraint be taken off;" and the effect was answerable. Ver. 35. "Straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue loosed," and all was well: and happy he who, as soon as he had his hearing and speech, had the blessed Jesus so near him to converse with. Now this cure was, 1. A proof of Christ's being the Messiah; for it was foretold that by his power the "ears of the deaf should be unstopped," and the Christ feedeth the people miraculously, 1: He refuseth to give a sign to the Pharisees, 10.

IN those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them,

2 I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat;

3 And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, [d]they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

4 And his disciples answered him, [e]From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?[1]

5 And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, [h]and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.

7 And they had a few small fishes: and he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

8 So they did eat, and were filled:[2] and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and he sent them away.

10 ¶ And straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.[3]

11 And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, [n]seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And [p]he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Verily I say unto you, [r]There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

13 And he left them, and, entering into the ship again, departed to the other side.

14 ¶ Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15 And he charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of [r]the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.[4]

25 After that, he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up;[6] and he was restored, [p]and saw every man clearly.

26 And he sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

27 ¶ And Jesus went out and his disciples into the towns of Cesarea Philippi: and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am?

28 And they answered, John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.

29 And he saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, [r]Thou art the Christ.

30 And he charged them that they should tell no man of him.

34 And when he had called the people unto him, with his disciples also, he said unto them, Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and [n]follow me.

"tongue of the dumb" should be made to "sing," Isa. xxxv. 5, 6. 2. It was a specimen of the operations of his gospel upon the minds of men. The great command of the gospel, and grace of Christ to poor sinners, is Ephphatha—Be opened. Grotius applies it thus, that the internal impediments of the mind are removed by the Spirit of Christ, as those bodily impediments were by the word of his power. He "opens the heart," as he did Lydia's, and thereby opens the ear to receive the word of God, and opens the mouth in prayer and praises.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. Miraculous Banquet.—See Matt. xiv. 14, and Mark vi. 36.

The Leaven of the Pharisees and of Herod.—Ver. 15. Observe here, 1. What the caution was; "'Take heed,' beware, lest ye partake of the 'leaven of the Pharisees,' lest ye embrace the tradition of the elders, which they are so wedded to, lest ye be proud, and hypocritical, and ceremonious, like them." Matthew adds, "and of the Sadducees;" Mark adds, "and of Herod;" whence some gather, that Herod and his courtiers were generally Sadducees, that is, Deists, men of no religion. Others give this sense, the Pharisees demanded a "sign from heaven;" and Herod was long desirous to see some miracle wrought by Christ, Luke xxiii. 8, such as he should prescribe, so that the leaven of both was the same; they were unsatisfied with the signs they had, and would have others of their own devising; "Take heed of this leaven," (saith Christ,) "be convinced by the miracles ye have seen, and covet not to see more." 2. How they misunderstood this caution. It seems, at their putting to sea this time, they had "forgotten to take bread," and "had not in their ship more than one loaf," ver. 14. When therefore Christ bid them "beware of the leaven of the Pharisees," they understood it as an intimation to them, not to apply to any of the Pharisees for relief, when they came to the other side, for they had lately been offended at them for eating with "unwashen hands." They "reasoned among themselves," what should be the meaning of this caution," and concluded, "'It is because we have no bread;' he saith this, to reproach us for being so careless, as to go to sea, and go among strangers, with but one loaf of bread; he doth, in effect, tell us, we must be brought to short allowance, and must eat our bread by weight." They reasoned it—διελογίζοντο, they disputed about it; one said, "It was owing to you;" and the other said, "It was owing to you, that we are so ill provided for this voyage." Thus, distrust of God makes Christ's disciples quarrel among themselves. 3. The reproof Christ gave them for their uneasiness in this matter; as it argued a disbelief of his power to supply them, notwithstanding the abundant experience they had [illegible] "do ye not remember 'how many baskets full ye took up' of the fragments?" [illegible] remember and could tell that they took up twelve baskets full one time, and seven another; "Why then," saith he, "'how is it that ye do not understand?' As if he that multiplied five loaves, and seven, could not multiply one." They seemed to suspect that that one was not matter enough to work upon, if he should have a mind to entertain his hearers a third time; and if that was their thought, it was indeed a very senseless one, as if it were not all alike to the Lord, to save by many or few, and as easy to make one loaf to feed five thousand as five.—Henry.

Restoration of Sight to a Blind Man.—Ver. 22—26. St. Mark alone records this miracle. This blind man was conducted by his friends to Jesus, when he was come to Bethsaida; yet he seems not to have been an inhabitant of that city. Our Lord, however, was pleased to restore him to sight in an unusual method: perhaps in order gradually to increase his faith and to raise his expectation; but it also illustrated the manner in which he often enlightens the souls of men. He took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; not only, that he might work the miracle in a more private manner, but probably to mark his disapprobation of the unbelief and wickedness of the inhabitants. He then spat on his eyes, and laid his hands on him; (as intimating that the power came from him, whatever external sign was used;) and inquired, if he could see any thing? And the man answered, that "he saw men, as trees, walking." He could see the people walking at a distance, and their motion satisfied him that they were men, or else he would not have been able to distinguish them from the trees, which he dimly saw at the same time. Our Lord having again laid his hands upon his eyes, and made him look up, his sight was completely restored: and he then ordered him to return home, and not enter into Bethsaida, or tell any one there of his being cured; as they were unworthy to receive any more attestations of divine power and goodness, having already withstood so many.—Scott.

Peter's Confession.—See Matt. xvi. 18.

Value of the Soul.—Ver. 36, 37.—When the devil is drawing away disciples and servants after him, he conceals the worst of it, tells them only of the pleasure, but nothing of the peril, of his service; "Ye shall not surely die;" but what there is of trouble and danger in the service of Christ, he tells us of it before, tells us we shall suffer, perhaps we shall die, in the cause; and represents the discouragements not less, but greater, than commonly they prove, that it may appear he deals fairly with us, and is not afraid that we should know the worst: because the advantages of his service abundantly suffice to balance the discouragements, if he will but impartially set the one over against the other. In short, 1. We must not dread the loss of our lives, provided it be [illegible] the cause of Christ; "Whosoever will save his life," by declining Christ [illegible] come to him, or by disowning [illegible] he has [illegible]

AND he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death,[1] till they have seen [c] the kingdom of God come with power.

2 ¶ And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves: and he was [g] transfigured before them.

3 And [h] his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

4 And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses;[2] and they were talking with Jesus.

5 And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6 For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid.

7 And there was a cloud that overshadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, [r] This is my beloved Son: hear him.

8 And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, [x] till the Son of man were risen from the dead.

10 And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean.[3]

11 ¶ And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?

12 And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and how it is written of the Son of man, that [c] he must suffer many things, and be set at nought.

he shall lose it, shall lose the comfort of his natural life, the root and fountain of his spiritual life, and all his hopes of eternal life; such a bad bargain will he make for himself. But whosoever "shall lose his life," shall be truly willing to lose it, shall venture it, shall lay it down, when he cannot keep it without denying Christ, he shall save it, he shall be an unspeakable gainer; for the loss of his life shall be made up to him in a better life. It is looked upon to be some kind of recompense to those who lose their lives in the service of their prince and country, to have their memories honoured and their families provided for; but what is that to the recompence which Christ makes in eternal life to all that die for him? 2. We must dread the loss of our souls, yea, though we should "gain the whole world" by it. "For what shall it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world," and all the wealth, honour, and pleasure in it, by denying Christ, and "lose his own soul?" "True it is," said Bishop Hooper, the night before he suffered martyrdom, "that life is sweet, and death is bitter, but eternal death is more bitter, and eternal life is more sweet." As the happiness of heaven, with Christ, is enough to countervail the loss of life itself for Christ, so the gain of all the world, in sin, is not sufficient to countervail the ruin of the soul by sin.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. THE TRANSFIGURATION.—See Matt. xvii. 2.

THE LUNATIC BOY.—Ver. 17—27. On our Lord's inquiring of the Scribes the subject about which they questioned his disciples, one of the multitude addressed him on behalf of his son; who, as he stated the case, was possessed with an evil spirit, which deprived him of speech and hearing; and often seized him with violence, dashing him upon the ground, and causing him to foam at the mouth, and gnash with his teeth in a most horrid manner; so that he pined away, as with wasting sickness. It hath often been observed, that this accords with the case of persons afflicted with the epilepsy; and hence some have ventured to assert, that it was no real possession: but does it not better become our ignorance, concerning the real causes of such dreadful maladies, to allow that at least the symptoms are aggravated by diabolical agency; than to suppose, that Christ, by word and deed, gave the most explicit sanction to a vulgar error, and taught men to ascribe effects to the malice and power of apostate spirits, which they had no agency in producing. Such irreverence to the word of God, and to the Redeemer's sacred character, is generally the fruit of pride and determined infidelity, in which Satan has far more influence, than these men are willing in any thing to allow him.—In this calamity the afflicted father had applied to the apostles to cast out the evil spirit, and they had tried, but without success: and it is probable, that their failure in this instance gave the scribes an occasion of questioning them concerning Jesus, and endeavouring to show that he was not the Messiah, or even a true prophet. Perhaps this conversation led the father also to conclude, that Jesus himself was not able to relieve his son. Our Lord therefore answered him, yet with reference to the scribes, the multitude, and even to the disciples, who in different degrees were chargeable with very criminal unbelief; and he reproved them as a faithless generation, because they had not more enlarged apprehensions of his power and authority, notwithstanding all the miracles which he had wrought among them: and he inquired how long he was to be with them, to display his glory? and how long he must bear with their perverseness and incredulity, before they would be convinced that he was the Son of God, and that nothing was impossible to his omnipotence? This is the evident meaning of the interrogations, as they stand here connected.—He then ordered the demoniac to be brought: upon which the evil spirit exerted his utmost malice and power, as if he would set Christ at defiance; and dashed the young man on the ground, tearing him, and constraining him to wallow or roll upon the earth, and foam in a dreadful manner. With this spectacle before his eyes, our Lord inquired, how long the youth had been thus afflicted? This question was probably intended to show the inveteracy of the case, to put the man's faith to a sharp trial, and eventually to illustrate the greatness of his own power. The father accordingly answered, that he had been so tormented from his childhood: and though he had hitherto been marvellously preserved, yet he had often been cast by the evil spirit into the fire and into the water, apparently with the purpose of destroying him. So that the case had baffled every attempt hitherto made for his relief: but if Jesus could do any thing, he entreated him to have compassion on them, and exert his extraordinary power in their behalf. Our Lord then assured him, that in case "he could believe," and steadfastly expect help from his power, the deliverance would certainly follow; seeing all things were possible to him that believed. The event being thus suspended on the father's faith, so that the son could not fail of a cure except through his default; the former, feeling a vehement struggle in his mind between faith and unbelief, and fearing lest he should throw an impediment in the way, immediately cried out with great earnestness, and with a flow of tears, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief." He could scarcely believe that Jesus could cast out this powerful and obstinate evil spirit; and yet he concluded, that he could enable him to believe, and inwardly assist him against unbelief! In effect he said, "Lord, I do believe, and expect help from thee alone; but I am not able to exclude all doubting about it: but do thou first help me against my unbelief, and then deliver my afflicted child from his deplorable calamity."—Where do we ever read of such an address to any prophet or apostle? And who does not perceive that such a request must have been highly reprehensible, if made to a mere man or creature? By 44 Where [l]their worm dieth not, and [m]the fire is not quenched.

45 And if [n]thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched;

46 Where °their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.[11]

this time the multitude began to assemble, that they might witness the event; and our Lord was therefore pleased to rebuke the unclean spirit, and to charge him to come out of the young man, and to enter no more into him. This command the demon was unable to resist: but it filled him with rancour and torment, so that crying out in a dreadful manner, he grievously tare the youth before he left him; insomuch that the spectators supposed him to be dead: but when Jesus took him by the hand, he arose, and was found to be perfectly recovered.—Scott.

CHARITY.—Ver. 39. "Jesus said, 'Forbid him not,' nor any other that do likewise." This was like the check Moses gave to Joshua; "Enviest thou for my sake?" Note, That which is good, and doeth good, must not be prohibited, though there may be some defect or irregularity in the manner of doing of it. "Casting out devils," and so destroying Satan's kingdom, doing this in Christ's name, and so owning him to be sent of God, and giving honour to him as the Fountain of grace, preaching down sin, and preaching up Christ, are good things, very good things. which ought not to be forbidden to any, merely because they "follow not with us." If Christ be preached, Paul therein doth, and will, rejoice, though he be eclipsed by it, Phil. i. 18 Two reasons Christ gives why such should not be forbidden. 1. Because we cannot suppose that any man, who makes use of Christ's name in working miracles, should blaspheme his name as the Scribes and Pharisees did. There were those indeed that did "in Christ's name cast out devils," and yet in other respects were "workers of iniquity;" but they did not "speak evil of Christ." 2. Because those that differed in communion, while they agreed to fight against Satan under the banner of Christ, ought to look upon one another as on the same side, notwithstanding that difference. "He that is not against us, is on our part." As to the great controversy between Christ and Beelzebub, he had said, "He that is not with me is against me," Matt. xii. 30. He that will not own Christ, owns Satan. But among those that own Christ, though not in the same circumstances, that follow him, though "not with us," we must reckon, that, though these differ from us, they are not against us, and therefore are "on our part," and we must not be any hinderance to their usefulness.—Henry.

SELF-DENIAL.—Ver. 43—50. These solemn warnings as here introduced, seem especially to relate to the ambition and carnal expectations of the apostles, which misled them into so many mistakes in judgment and practice. All such evil propensities must be mortified and cut off, in order to their entering into life, however painful the operation might be. The expressions are here more strong and varied, than in any of the parallel passages. The hand, the foot, and the eye are separately mentioned, as illustrative of the supposed value of the sacrifices to be made, and of the resolution, self-denial, and wisdom required in order to make them. It is repeatedly said, "Their worm never dieth," as well as that "the fire is never quenched." Doubtless, remorse of conscience and keen self-reflection constitute this never-dying worm: so that the expression is alike contrary to the idea of annihilation, and final restitution to happiness; for on either of these suppositions, their worm would die, and their torturing consciences would cease. —Scott.

CHAP. X. MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.—See Matt. xix. 3.

CHRIST'S LOVE FOR LITTLE CHILDREN.—Ver. 16. He received the children, and gave them what was desired. "He took them up in his arms," in token of his affectionate concern for them; "put his hands upon them," as was desired, and "blessed them." See how he outdid the desires of these parents; they begged he would touch them, but he did more. 1. He "took them in his arms." Now the scripture was fulfilled, Isa. xl. 11. "He shall gather the lambs in his arms, and carry them in his bosom." Time was, when Christ himself was taken up in old Simeon's arms, Luke ii. 28. And now he took up these children, not complaining of the burthen, (as Moses did, when he was bid to carry Israel, that peevish child, "in his bosom, as a nursing father bears the sucking child," Num. xi. 12, but pleased with it. If we in a right manner bring our children to Christ, he will take them up, not only in the arms of his power and providence, but in the arms of his pity and grace; as Ezek. xvi. 8, underneath them are the everlasting arms. 2. He "put his hands upon them," denoting the bestowing of his Spirit upon them, (for that is the hand of the Lord,) and his setting them apart for himself. 3. He "blessed" them with the spiritual blessings he came to give. Our children are happy, if they have but the "Mediator's blessing" for their portion. It is true, we do not read that he baptized these children, baptism was not fully settled as the door of admission into the church, till after Christ's resurrection; but he asserted their visible church-membership, and by another sign bestowed those blessings upon them, which are now appointed to be conveyed and conferred by baptism, the seal of the promise, which is "to us" and "to our children."

CHRIST AND THE YOUNG MAN.—Ver. 17—22. 1. Christ gave him a command of trial, by which it would appear whether he did in sincerity aim at eternal life, and press towards it: he seemed to have his heart much upon it, and if so, he is what he should be; but has he indeed his heart upon it? Bring him to the touchstone. (1.) Can he find in his heart to "part with his riches" for the service of Christ? He hath a good estate, and now, shortly, at the first founding of the Christian church, the necessity of the case will require that those who have "lands, sell them, and lay the money at the apostles' feet;"

19 Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

20 And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth.

21 Then Jesus, beholding him, loved him, and said unto him, [o]One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have [q]treasure in heaven: and come, [r]take up the cross, and follow me.

22 And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

23 ¶ And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches [y]enter into the kingdom of God!

24 And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that [b]trust in riches[5] to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, [e]Who then can be saved?

27 And Jesus, looking upon them, saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: [s]for with God all things are possible.

28 ¶ Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee.

29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, [k]for my sake, and the gospel's,

30 But he shall receive [l]an hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, [m]with persecutions;[6] and in the world to come [n]eternal life.

31 But many that are first shall be last; and the last first.

32 ¶ And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed;[7] and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him,

33 Saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall [t]condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles:

34 And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him; [s]and the third day he shall rise again.

35 ¶ And [a]James and John, the sons of Zebedee, come unto him, saying, Master, [c]we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

36 And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you?

37 They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory.[8]

38 But Jesus said unto them, [g]Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be [l]baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?

39 And they said unto him, We can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of;[9] and with the baptism that I am baptized withal, shall ye be baptized:

40 But [m]to sit on my right hand and on my left hand is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

41 And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

42 But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, Ye know that they which *are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

43 But so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister:

44 And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

45 For even the Son of man [r]came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, [a]and to give his life a ransom for many.

46 ¶ And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples, and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the son of Timeus, sat by the high-way side begging.[10]

47 And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And [z]many charged him that he should hold his peace: [a]but he cried the more a great deal, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me.

49 And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, [c]Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.

50 And he, [d]casting away his garment,[11] rose, and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, [e]What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, that I might receive my sight.

and how will he dispense with that? Acts iv. 34. After a while, tribulation and persecution will arise, because of the word; and he must be forced to sell his estate, or have it taken from him, and how will he like that? Let him know the worst now; if he will come up to these terms, let him quit his pretensions; as good at first as at last. "Sell whatsoever thou hast" over and above what is necessary for thy support: probably, he had no family to provide for; let him therefore be a "father to the poor," and make them his heirs. Every man, according to his ability, must relieve the poor, and be content, when there is occasion, to straiten himself to do it. Worldly wealth is given us, not only as maintenance to bear our charges through this world, according to our place in it, but as a talent, to be used and employed for the glory of our great Master in the world, who hath so ordered it, that the poor we should have always with us as his receivers. (2.) Can he find in his heart to go through the hardest costliest services he may be called to as a disciple of Christ, and depend upon him for a recompence in heaven? He asks Christ what he shall do, more than he has done, to obtain eternal life? and Christ puts it to him, whether he has indeed that firm belief of, and that high value for, eternal life, that he seems to have. Doth he really believe there is a treasure in heaven sufficient to make up all he can leave, or lose, or lay out, for Christ? Is he willing to deal with Christ upon trust? Can he give him credit for all he is worth; and be willing to bear a present cross, in expectation of a future crown? 2. Upon this he flew off. "He was sad at that saying;" was sorry that he could not be a follower of Christ, upon any easier terms than leaving all to follow him; that he could not lay hold on eternal life, and keep hold of his temporal possessions too. But, since he could not come up to the terms of discipleship, he was so fair as not to pretend to it; "He went away grieved." Here appeared the truth of that, Matt. vi. 24. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon;" while he held to mammon, he did in effect despise Christ, as all those do who prefer the world before him. He bids for what he has a mind for in the market, yet goes away grieved, and leaves it, because he cannot have it at his own price. Two words to a bargain. Motions are not marriages. That which ruined this young man, was, "he had great possessions:" thus the prosperity of fools destroy them, and those who spend their days in wealth, are tempted to say to God, "Depart from us;" or to their hearts, "Depart from God."

Danger of Riches.—Ver. 25. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man," that "trusts in riches," or inclines to do so, to enter into the "kingdom of God." The disproportion here seems so great, (though the more so, the more it answers the intention,) that some have laboured to bring the camel and the eye of the needle a little nearer together. 1. Some imagine there might be some wicket gate, or door, to Jerusalem, commonly known by the name of "the needle's eye," for its straitness, through which a camel could not be got, unless he were unloaded, and made to kneel, as those camels, Gen. xxiv. 11. So a rich man cannot get to heaven, unless he be willing to part with the burthen of his worldly wealth, and stoop to the duties of a humble religion, and so enter in "at the strait gate." 2. Others suggest that the word we translate a "camel," sometimes signifies a cable rope, which, though not to be got through a needle's eye, yet is of greater affinity to it. A rich man, compared with the poor, is as a cable to a single thread, stronger, but not so pliable, and it will not go through the "needle's eye," unless it be untwisted. So the rich man must be loosed and disentangled from his riches, and then there is some hope of him, that thread by thread he may be got through the eye of the needle, otherwise he is good for nothing but to cast anchor in the earth.—Henry.

Zebedee's Children.—See Matt. xx. 20.

Blind Bartimeus.—Ver. 46—52. St. Matthew mentions two blind men who received sight on this occasion; probably the other was excited to apply by Bartimeus's example, and was not so remarkable a person. Both Matthew and Mark record the miracle, as wrought when Jesus "went out of Jericho;" but Luke says it took place, "when he was come nigh to Jericho," and he afterwards records an event which took place in that city. He seems, however, only to mean that the miracle was performed near Jericho: for it is not improbable that Jesus staid some days in that neighbourhood; and this occurred, as he went out of the city during that time, though he returned thither again. Our Lord, attended by his disciples and surrounded by the multitude, came to a place, where a man well known in those parts sat by the way-side begging. This person had previously heard of him and his miracles, and had been led to believe that he was the promised Messiah, by comparing these reports, with what he had read while he had his eye-sight, or heard from the Scriptures on that subject. Enquiring, therefore, what the concourse of people meant, he learned that Jesus of Nazareth was passing by; and immediately he conceived hope of recovering his sight by miracle. Accordingly he began, without delay or hesitation, to cry out, "Jesus, thou Son of David have mercy upon me." Our Lord might, perhaps, be then engaged in discourse with his attendants, and as Bartimeus was a mean person, and his application rude and clamorous; many present charged him to hold his peace. He was, however, too much in earnest to be thus silenced, and to lose his opportunity; on the contrary, he cried out a great deal more earnestly and incessantly than before, "Thou Son of David, have mercy upon me." At length our Lord stood still, and ordered the blind man to be conducted to him; and they who informed him, encouraged him to expect a cure, as Jesus called for him. Accord-

CHAP. XI.

[1]Christ rideth with triumph into Jerusalem, 1. He curseth the fruitless fig-tree, 12.

AND when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany,[1] at the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples,

2 And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat;[2] loose him, and bring him.

3 And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye [g]that the Lord hath need of him; [f]and straightway he will send him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without, in a place where two ways met; and they loose him.

5 And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt?

6 And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let them go.

7 And they brought the colt to Jesus, [h]and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him.

8 And many spread their garments in the way; and others cut down branches off the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, [i]Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest.

11 And [o]Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the even-tide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

12 ¶ And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry:

13 And [s]seeing a fig-tree afar off having leaves, he came, if [t]haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet.[3]

14 And Jesus answered and said unto it, [u]No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever.[4] And his disciples heard it.

15 ¶ And they come to Jerusalem: [x]and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew [y]the tables of the money-changers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

16 And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple.

17 And he taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it [a]a den of thieves.[5]

18 And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people was [d]astonished at his doctrine.

19 And when even was come, he went out of the city.

20 ¶ And in the morning, as they passed by, [f]they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots.

21 And Peter, calling to remembrance, saith unto him, Master, behold, the fig-tree which thou cursedst is withered away!

22 And Jesus answering, saith unto them, Have [*]faith in God.

23 For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; [l]and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

24 Therefore I say unto you, [l]What things soever[6] ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

25 And when ye stand[7] praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any;[8] that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26 But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

27 ¶ And they come again to Jerusalem; and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders,

28 And say unto him, [q]By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things?

29 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one [*]question, and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

30 The [s]baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me.

31 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, [t]Why then did ye not believe him?

32 But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

33 And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell. And Jesus answering, saith unto them, [z]Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

He implies, that whenever the Christian prays, he must not only have a steadfast faith in the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, but his heart must likewise be full of tenderness, compassion, and forgiveness towards his fellow-creatures.—MANN.

ingly he cast away his upper garment, as in haste, and wanting to be rid of every encumbrance; and thus he came to Jesus, who asked him, "What he would that he should do unto him?" He well knew what he wanted; but he chose to hear it from his own lips, as the language of faith, dependence, and expectation. When, therefore, the man had answered, "Lord, that I might receive my sight;" Jesus bade him "go his way," or depart in peace; for his faith, by leading him to seek help from him, had been the means of his being restored to sight, and even of his salvation. Immediately he received sight; but instead of departing, he joined the multitude, and followed Jesus in the way, full of joy and gratitude, and glorifying God for the mercy which he had received; and all the people joined him in praising the Lord for what had been done.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. CHRIST'S TRIUMPHAL PROCESSION.—Ver. 1.—11. 1. The outside of this triumph was very mean; he rode upon an "ass's colt," which being an ass, looked contemptible, and made no figure; and being but a "colt, whereon never man sat," we may suppose was rough and untrimmed, and not only so, but rude and ungovernable, and would disturb and disgrace the solemnity. This colt was borrowed too. Christ went upon the water in a borrowed boat, ate the passover in a borrowed chamber, was buried in a borrowed sepulchre, and here rode on a borrowed ass. Let not Christians scorn to be beholden one to another, and, when need is, to go a borrowing; for our Master did not. He had no rich trappings; they threw their clothes upon the colt, and so he "sat upon him." The persons that attended were mean people; and all the show they could make was, by "spreading their garments in the way," and "strewing branches of trees in the way," as they used to do at the feast of tabernacles. All these were marks of his humiliation; even when he would be taken notice of, he would be taken notice of for his meanness; and they are instructions to us, not to "mind high things," but to "condescend to them of low estate." How ill doth it become Christians to take state, when Christ was so far from affecting it! 2. The inside of this triumph was very great; not only as it was the fulfilling of the scripture, (which is not taken notice of here, as it was in Matthew,) but as there were several rays of Christ's glory shining forth in the midst of all this meanness. (1.) Christ showed his knowledge of things distant, and his power over the wills of men, when he sent his disciples for the colt. By this it appears that he can "do every thing," and "no thought can be withholden from him." 2. He showed his dominion over the creatures in riding on a colt that was never backed. The subjection of the inferior part of the creation to man is spoken of, Ps. viii. 5, 6, with application to Christ; (Ps. viii. 5, 6, compared with Heb. ii. 8;) for to him it is owing, and to his mediation, that we have any remaining benefit by the grant God made to man, of a sovereignty in this lower world, Gen. i. 28. And perhaps Christ, in riding the ass's colt, would give a shadow of his power over the spirit of man, who is born as "the wild ass's colt," Job xi. 12. 3. The colt was brought from a place "where two ways met," as if Christ would show that he came to direct those into the right way, who had two ways before them, and were in danger of taking the wrong. 4. Christ received the joyful hosannas of the people; that is, both the welcome they gave him, and their good wishes to the prosperity of his kingdom.

A FORGIVING SPIRIT ESSENTIAL TO FORGIVENESS.—Ver. 25, 26. When we are at prayer, we must remember to pray for others, particularly for our enemies, and those that have wronged us; now we cannot pray sincerely that God would do them good, if we bear malice to them, and wish them ill. If we have injured others before we pray, we must go and "be reconciled to them," Matt. v. 23. But if they have injured us, we go a nearer way to work, and must immediately from our hearts forgive them. 1. Because this is a good step towards obtaining the pardon of our own sins: Forgive, that "your Father may forgive you;" that is, "that you may be qualified to receive forgiveness, that he may forgive you without injury to his honour, as it would be, if he should suffer those to have such benefit by his mercy, as are so far from being conformable to the pattern of it." Because the want of this is a certain bar to the obtaining of the pardon of our sins; "'If ye do not forgive' those who have injured you, if ye hate their persons, bear them a grudge, meditate revenge, and take all occasions to speak ill of them, 'neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.'" This ought to be remembered in prayer, because one great errand we have to the throne of grace, is, to pray for the pardon of our sins: and care about it ought to be our daily care, because prayer is a part of our daily work. Our Saviour often insists on this, for it was his great design to engage his disciples to love one another.

THE DILEMMA.—Ver. 30—33. 1. If they own the baptism of John to be from heaven, as really it was, they shame themselves; for Christ will presently turn it upon them, "Why did ye not then believe him," and receive his baptism? They could not bear that Christ should say this, but they could bear it that their own consciences should say so, because they had an art of stifling and silencing them, and because what conscience said, though it might gall and grate them a little, would not shame them; and then they would do well enough, who looked no further than Saul's care when he was convicted, "Honour me now before this people." 1 Sam. xv. 30. 2. If they say, "'It is of men, he was not sent of God, but his doctrine and baptism were inventions of his own," they

The parable of the vineyard, 1. Touching the payment of tribute, 13, and the resurrection, 18. The widow and her two mites, 41.

AND he began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower,[1] and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

2 And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant,[2] that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard.

3 And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4 And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled.

5 And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others; beating some, and killing some.

6 Having yet therefore [m]one son, his wellbeloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, [o]They will reverence my son.

7 But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be ours.

8 And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard.

9 What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do? [s]He will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

10 And have ye not read this scripture, [x]The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:

11 This [y]was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

12 And they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people; for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them: and they left him, and went their way.[3]

13 ¶ And they send unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.

14 And when they were come, they say unto him, Master, [c]we know that thou art true, and carest for no man; for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cesar, or not?

15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why tempt ye me? Bring me *a penny, that I may see it.

16 And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cesar's.[4]

17 And Jesus answering, said unto them, [m]Render to Cesar the things that are Cesar's, [n]and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.

18 ¶ Then come unto him the Sadducees, which [q]say there is no resurrection;[5] and they asked him, saying,

19 Master, Moses wrote unto us, [r]If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

20 Now [t]there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.

21 And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22 And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

23 In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24 And Jesus answering, said unto them, [t]Do ye not therefore err, [u]because ye know not the scriptures, [x]neither the power of God?

25 For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; [y]but are as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead, that they rise; have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, [b]I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?

27 He [c]is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err.

28 ¶ And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel;[6] The Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.[7]

32 And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: [f]for there is one God; and there is none other but He:

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices.

expose themselves, the people will be ready to do them a mischief, or at least clamour upon them: for "all men counted John that he was a prophet indeed," and therefore they could not bear that he should be reflected on. CHAP. XII. PARABLE OF THE WICKED HUSBANDMEN.—Christ had formerly in parables showed how he designed to set up the gospel-church: now he begins in parables to show how he would lay aside the Jewish church, which it might have been grafted into the stock of, but was built upon the ruins of. We may observe here, 1. They that enjoy the privileges of the visible church, have a vineyard let out to them, which is capable of great improvement, and from the occupiers of which rent is justly expected. When God "showed his word unto Jacob, his statutes and judgments unto Israel," Ps. cxlvii. 19, when he set up his temple among them, his priesthood, and his ordinances, then he "let out" to them the "vineyard" he had "planted;" which he "hedged," and in which he "built a tower," ver. 1. Members of the church are God's tenants, and they have both a good landlord and a good bargain, and may live well upon it, if it be not their own fault. 2. Those whom God lets out his vineyard to, he sends his servants to, to put them in mind of his just expectations from them, ver. 2. He was not hasty in his demands, nor high, for he did not send for the rent till they could make it, at the season; nor did he put them to the trouble of making money of it, but was willing to take it in specie. 3. It is sad to think what base usage God's faithful ministers had met with, in all ages, from those that have enjoyed the privileges of the church, and have not brought forth fruit answerable. The Old-Testament prophets were persecuted even by those that went under the name of the Old-Testament church. They "beat them, and sent them empty away," ver. 3; that was bad; they "wounded them," and "sent them away shamefully entreated," ver. 4; that was worse: nay, at length, they came to such a pitch of wickedness, that they "killed" them, ver. 5. 4. It was no wonder of those who abused the prophets, abused Christ himself. God did at length send them his Son, his "well-beloved;" it was therefore so much the greater kindness in him to send him; as in Jacob to send Joseph to visit his brethren, Gen. xxxvii. 14. And it might be expected that he whom their Master "loved," they also should respect and love, ver. 6. "They will reverence my son,' and in reverence to him, will pay their rent." But, instead of "reverencing" him because he was the son and heir, they "therefore" hated him, ver. 7. Because Christ, in calling to repentance and reformation, made his demands with more authority that the prophets had done, they were the more enraged against him, and determined to put him to death, that they might engross all church power to themselves, and that all the respect and obedience of the people might be paid to them only; "'The inheritance shall be ours,' we will be Lords paramount, and bear all the sway." There is an "inheritance," which, if they had duly "reverenced the Son," might have been theirs, a heavenly inheritance; but they slighted that, and would have their inheritance in the wealth, and pomp, and powers of this world. So they "took him, and killed him;" they had not done it yet, but they would do it in a little time; and they "cast him out of the vineyard," they refused to admit his gospel when he was gone; it would by no means agree with their scheme, and so they threw it out with disdain and detestation. 5. For such sinful and shameful doings nothing can be expected but a fearful doom, ver. 9. "What shall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do?" It is easy to say what, for nothing could be done more provoking. (1.) He will "come and destroy the husbandmen," whom he would have saved. When they only denied the fruit, he did not distrain upon them for the rent, nor disseize them and dispossess them for nonpayment; but when they killed his servants, and his Son, he determined to destroy them; and this was fulfilled when Jerusalem was laid waste, and the Jewish nation extirpated and made a desolation. (2.) He will "give the vineyard to others." If he have not the rent from them, he will have it from another people, for God will be no loser by any. This was fulfilled in the taking in of the Gentiles, and the abundance of fruit which the "gospel brought forth in all the world," Col. i. 6. Note, If some from whom we expected well, prove bad, it doth not follow but that others will be better. Christ encouraged himself with this in his undertaking; "Though Israel be not gathered," not gathered to him, but gathered against him, "yet shall I be glorious," Is. xlix. 5, 6, as a "Light to lighten the Gentiles."

THE GREAT COMMAND.—Ver. 29—31. 1. The great commandment of all, which is indeed inclusive of all, is, that of "loving God with all our hearts;" (1.) Where this is the commanding principle in the soul, there is a disposition to every other duty. Love is the leading affection of the soul; the love of God is the leading grace in the renewed soul. 2. Where this is not, nothing else that is good, is done, or done aright, or accepted, or done long. Loving God with all our heart, will effectually take us off from, and arm us against, all those things that are rivals with him for the throne in our souls, and will engage us to every thing by which he may be honoured, and with which he will be pleased; and no commandment will be grievous where this principle commands, and has

2 And Jesus answering, said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? [c]there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 ¶ And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, over against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately,

4 Tell us, when shall these things be?[1] and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

5 And Jesus answering them, began to say, [h]Take heed lest any man deceive you:

6 For [i]many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; [k]and shall deceive many.

7 And [l]when ye shall hear of wars, and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for such things [m]must needs be; but the end shall not be yet.

8 For [n]nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles: [p]these are the beginnings of *sorrows.

9 But take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, [r]for a testimony against them.

10 And the gospel must first be published among all nations.

11 But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, [u]take no thought[2] beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate; but whatsoever [x]shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, [y]but the Holy Ghost.

12 Now [z]the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son; and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

13 And [a]ye shall be hated of all men[3] for my name's sake: [b]but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 ¶ But when ye shall see [c]the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) [f]then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains:

15 And let him that is on the house-top not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house:

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17 But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck, in those days!

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

19 For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation, which God created, unto this time, neither shall be.

20 And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but [l]for the elect's sake,[4] whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days.

21 And then, [m]if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not:

22 For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, [n]if it were possible, even the elect.

23 But [o]take ye heed: [p]behold, I have foretold you all things.

the ascendant. Now here in Mark, our Saviour prefixes to this command the great doctrinal truth upon which it is built, ver. 29. "Hear, O Israel, The Lord our God is one Lord;" if we firmly believe this, it will follow, that we shall love him "with all our heart." He is Jehovah, who has all amiable perfections in himself, he is "our God," to whom we stand related and obliged, and therefore we ought to "love him," to set our affections on him, let out our desire toward him, and take a delight in him; and he is "one Lord," therefore he must be loved with our "whole heart;" he has the sole "right to us," and therefore ought to have the sole "possession of us." If he be one, our hearts must be one with him, and since there is no God besides, no rival must be admitted with him upon the throne. 2. The second great commandment is, to "love our neighbour as ourselves, ver. 31, as truly and sincerely as we love ourselves, and in the same instance, and we must show it by "doing as we would be done by." As we must therefore love God better than ourselves, because he is Jehovah, a Being infinitely better than we are, and must love him with "all our heart," because he is "one Lord," and there is no other like him; so we must "love our neighbour as ourselves," because he is of the same nature with ourselves.

THE WIDOW'S MITE.—Ver. 42—44. Many would have been ready to censure this "poor widow," and to think she did ill; why should she give to others, when she had little enough for herself? Charity begins at home; or, if she would give it, why did she not bestow it upon some poor body that she knew? What occasion was there for her bringing it to the "treasury" to be disposed of by the chief priests, who, we have reason to fear, were partial in the disposal of it? It is so rare a thing to find any that would not blame this widow that we cannot expect to find any that will imitate her! and yet our Saviour commends her, and therefore we are sure that she did very well and wisely. If Christ saith, "Well done," no matter who saith otherwise; and we must hence learn, 1. That giving alms is an excellent, good thing, and highly pleasing to the Lord Jesus; and if we be humble and sincere in it, he will graciously accept of it, though in some circumstances there may not be all the discretion in the world. 2. Those that have but a little, ought to give alms out of their little, Those that live by their labour, from hand to mouth, must give to those that need, Eph. iv. 28. 3. It is very good for us to straiten and deny ourselves, that we may be able to give the more to the poor; to deny ourselves not only superfluities, but even conveniences, for the sake of charity. We should in many cases pinch ourselves, that we may supply the necessities of others; this is loving our neighbours as ourselves. 4. Public charities should be encouraged, for they bring upon a nation public blessings; and though there may be some mismanagement of them, yet that is not a good reason why we should not bring in our quota to them. 5. Though we can give but a little in charity, yet if it be according to our ability, and be given with an upright heart, it shall be accepted of Christ, who requires according to what a man has, and not according to what he has not; two mites shall be put upon the score, and brought to account, if given in a right manner, as if it had been two pounds. 6. It is much to the praise of charity, when we give not only to our power, but beyond our power, as the Macedonian churches, whose "deep poverty abounded to the riches of their liberality," 2 Cor. viii. 2, 3. When we can cheerfully provide for others, out of our own necessary provision; as the widow of Sarepta for Elijah, and Christ for his five thousand guests, and trust God to provide for us some other way, this is thank-worthy.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. SIGNS OF CHRIST'S COMING.—See Matt. xxiv. 3.

FALSE CHRISTS.—See Matt. xxiv. 5.

COMING PERSECUTION.—Ver. 9—12. Observe, What the trouble is which they must expect. 1. They shall "be hated of all men;" trouble enough! The thoughts of "being hated" are grievous to a tender spirit, and the fruits of that hatred must needs be a constant vexation; those that are malicious, will be mischievous. It was not for any thing amiss in them, or done amiss by them, that they were "hated," but for Christ's name sake, because they were called by his name, called upon his name, preached his name, and wrought miracles in his name. The world hated them because he loved them. 2. Their own "relations" shall "betray them," those to whom they were most nearly allied, and on whom therefore they depended for protection; "They 'shall betray you,' shall inform against you, and be your prosecutors." If a father has a child that is a Christian, he shall become void of natural affection, it shall all be swallowed up in bigotry, and he shall betray his own child to the persecutors, as if he were a worshipper of other gods, Deut. xiii. 6. 3. Their "church-rulers" shall inflict "their censures" upon them; "You shall be 'delivered up' to the great Sanhedrim at Jerusalem, and to the inferior courts and consistories in other cities, and shall be 'beaten in the synagogues' with forty stripes at a time, as offenders against the law which was read in the synagogue." It is no new thing for the church's artillery, through the treachery of its officers, to be turned against some of its best friends. 4. "Governors" and "kings" shall use their power against them. Because the Jews have not power to put them to death, they shall incense the Roman powers against them, as they did Herod against James and Peter; and they shall "cause you to be put to death," as enemies to the empire. They must resist unto blood, and still resist.

25 And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

26 And then shall they see [r]the Son of man coming in the clouds, with great power and glory.

27 And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together [u]his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven.

28 Now [y]learn a parable of the fig-tree; When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near:

29 So ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30 Verily I say unto you, [a]That this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done.

31 [b]Heaven and earth shall pass away: [c]but my words shall not pass away.

32 ¶ But of that day, and that hour, knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, [e]neither the Son,[5] but the Father.

33 Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is.

34 For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 [l]Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning;

36 Lest, coming suddenly, [m]he find you sleeping.

37 And what I say unto you, [n]I say unto all, Watch.

A conspiracy against Christ, 1. A woman poureth ointment on his head, 3. Judas selleth, 10, and betrayeth him, 43. Peter thrice denieth him, 66.

AFTER two days was the feast of [b]the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2 But they said, [e]Not on the feast-day, [f]lest there be an uproar of the people.

3 ¶ And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster-box of ointment of *spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box,[1] and poured it on his head.

4 And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred [t]pence, and have been given to the poor. [m]And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, [n]Let her alone; why trouble ye her?[2] she hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: [q]but me ye have not always.

8 She [r]hath done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I say unto you, [t]Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for [u]a memorial of her.

10 ¶ And [x]Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them.

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. And [b]he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

12 ¶ And the first day of unleavened bread, when they [‡]killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover?

13 And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14 And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the goodman of the house, [f]The Master saith, Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

15 And [g]he will shew you a large [h]upper room furnished and prepared:[3] there make ready for us.

16 And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

17 And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, [n]One of you which eateth with me shall betray me.

19 And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

20 And he answered and said unto them, [p]It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me[4] in the dish.

21 The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him; [s]but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! [t]good were it for that man if he had never been born.

22 ¶ And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: [y]this is my body.

23 And he took the cup, and [z]when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: [a]and they all drank of it.

End of all things.—Ver. 24—27. Here Jesus foretells, 1. The final dissolution of the present frame and fabric of the world; even of that part of it which seems least liable to change the upper part, the purer and more refined part; "The sun shall be darkened," and the "moon" shall no more "give her light;" for they shall be quite outshone by the glory of the Son of man, Is. xxiv. 23. The "stars of heaven," that from the beginning had kept their place and regular motion, shall fall as leaves in autumn; and the "powers that are in heaven," the heavenly bodies, the fixed stars, "shall be shaken. 2. The visible appearance of the Lord Jesus, to whom the judgment of that day will be committed. "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds." Probably he will come over that very place where he sat when he said this; for the clouds are in the lower region of the air. He shall come with "great power and glory," such as will be suited to the errand on which he comes. "Every eye shall then see him." 3. The gathering together of all the elect to him. He shall "send his angels," and "gather together his elect" to him, to meet him in the air, 1 Thess. iv. 17. They shall be fetched from one end of the world to the other, so that none shall be missing from that "general" assembly; they shall be fetched "from the uttermost part of the earth," most remote from the place where Christ's tribunal shall be set, and shall be brought to the "uttermost part of heaven;" so sure, so swift, so easy shall their conveyance be, that there shall none of them miscarry, though they were to be brought from the uttermost part of the earth one way, to the uttermost part of the heaven another way. A faithful Israelite shall be carried safely, though it were from the utmost border of the land of bondage to the utmost border of the land of promise.

Meaning of the Clause "Neither the Son."—Ver. 32. There were those, in the primitive times, who taught from this text, that there were some things that Christ, as man, was ignorant of; and from thence was called Agnoetæ; they said, "It was no more absurd to say so, than to say that his human soul suffered grief and fear;" and many of the orthodox fathers approved of this. Some would evade it, by saying that Christ spake this in a way of prudential economy, to divert the disciples from further inquiry: but to this one of the ancients answers, It is not fit to speak too nicely in this matter—so Leontius in Dr. Hammond. "It is certain (saith Archbishop Tillotson) that Christ, as God, could not be ignorant of any thing; but the divine wisdom which dwelt in our Saviour did communicate itself to his human soul according to the divine pleasure, so that his human nature might sometimes not know some things; therefore Christ is said to grow in wisdom, Luke ii. 52, which he could not be said to do, if the human nature of Christ did necessarily know all things by virtue of its union with the divinity." Dr. Lightfoot explains it thus; Christ calls himself the Son, as Messiah. Now the Messiah, as such, was the Father's servant, Is. xlii. 1, sent and deputed by him, and, as such a one, he refers himself often to his Father's will and command, and owns he "did nothing of himself;" John v. 19, in like manner he might be said to "know nothing of himself." The revelation of Jesus Christ was what "God gave unto him," Rev. i. 1. He thinks, therefore, that we are to distinguish between those excellences and perfections of his, which resulted from the personal union between the divine and human nature, and those which flowed from the anointing of the Spirit; from the former flowed the infinite dignity of his person, and his perfect freedom from all sin; but from the latter flowed his power of working miracles, and his foreknowledge of things to come.—Henry.

CHAP. XIV. The Alabaster Box.—See Matt. xxvi. 6.

Treachery of Judas.—See Matt. xxvi. 14.

The Last Passover.—Ver. 12—21. 1. Christ ate the passover at the usual time, when the other Jews did, as Dr. Whitby has fully made out, and not, as Dr. Hammond would have it, the night before. It was on the first day of that feast, which (taking in all the eight days of the feast) was called, "The feast of unleavened bread," even that day when they "killed the passover." 2. He directed his disciples how to find the place where he intended to eat the passover; and hereby gave such another proof of his infallible knowledge of things distant and future, (which to us seem altogether contingent,) as he had given when he sent them for the ass on which he rode in triumph; chap. xi. 6. "'Go into the city,' (for the 'passover' must be 'eaten' in Jerusalem,) and 'there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water;' (a servant sent for water to clean the rooms in his master's house;) 'follow him, go in' where he 'goes,' inquire for his master, 'the good man of the house,' and desire him to show you a room." No doubt, the inhabitants of Jerusalem had rooms fitted up to be let out, for this occasion, to those that came out of the country to keep the passover, and one of those Christ made use of; not any friend's house, nor any house he had formerly frequented, for then he would have said, "Go to such a friend," or, "You know where we used to be, go thither and prepare." Probably, he went where he was not known, that he might be undisturbed with his disciples. Perhaps he notified it by a sign, to conceal it from Judas, that he might not know till he came to the place. 3. He ate the passover in an upper room, furnished,—laid with carpets; so Dr. Hammond; it would seem to have been a very handsome dining-room, Christ was far from affecting any thing that looked stately in eating his common meals; on the contrary, he chose that which was homely, sat down on the grass: but when he 24 And he said unto them, [b]This is my blood of the new testament, [c]which is shed for many.

25 Verily I say unto you, [d]I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it [e]new in the kingdom of God.

26 ¶ And when they had sung an [*]hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

27 And Jesus saith unto them, [h]All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28 But [k]after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29 But Peter said unto him, [l]Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

31 But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. [p]Likewise also said they all.

32 ¶ And [q]they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

33 And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

34 And saith unto them, [u]My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, [x]and watch.

35 And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him.

36 And he said, [s]Abba, Father,[5] [a]all things are possible unto thee; [b]take away this cup from me: [c]nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? [f]couldest not thou watch one hour?

38 [g]Watch ye, and pray, lest ye enter into temptation: [h]the spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak.

39 And again [i]he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40 And when he returned, he found them asleep again; (for their eyes were heavy;) [k]neither wist they what to answer him.

41 And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, [l]Sleep on now, and take your rest: it is enough,[6] [m]the hour is come; behold, [n]the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

42 Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

43 ¶ And immediately, [o]while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, [p]and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him had given them [q]a token, saying, [r]Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he; take him, [s]and lead him away safely.

45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straightway to him, and saith, [t]Master, Master: and kissed him.

46 And [u]they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jesus answered and said unto them, [y]Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me?

49 I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not: [z]but the scriptures must be fulfilled.

50 And [b]they all forsook him, and fled.

51 And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth[7] cast about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him.

52 And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

53 ¶ And [d]they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests, and the elders, and the scribes.

54 And [f]Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55 And the chief priests and all the council [k]sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and found none:

56 For many bare false witness against him; but their witness agreed not together.

57 And there arose certain, [m]and bare false witness against him, saying,

58 We heard him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another [n]made without hands.

59 But [o]neither so did their witness agree together.

60 And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

61 But [q]he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again, the high priest asked him, and said unto him, [r]Art thou the Christ, [s]the Son of the Blessed?[8]

62 And Jesus said, [t]I am: and ye shall see [u]the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high priest [x]rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses?

was to keep a sacred feast in honour of that, he would be at the expense of as good a room as he could get. God looks not at outward pomp, but he looks at the tokens and expressions of inward reverence for a divine institution, which, it is to be feared, those want, who, to save charges, deny themselves decencies in the worship of God. 4. He ate it "with the twelve," who were his family, to teach those who have the charge of families, not only families of children, but families of servants, or families of scholars, or pupils, to keep up religion among them, and worship God with them. If Christ came "with the twelve," then Judas was with them, though he was at this time contriving to betray his Master; and it is plain by what follows, that he was there: he did not absent himself, lest he should have been suspected; had his seat been empty at this feast, they would have said, as Saul of David, "He is not clean, surely he is not clean," 1 Sam. xx. 26. Hypocrites, though they know it is at their peril, yet crowd into special ordinances, to keep up their repute, and palliate their secret wickedness. Christ did not exclude him from the feast, though he knew his wickedness, for it was not, as yet, become public and scandalous. Christ, designing to put the keys of the kingdom of heaven into the hands of men, who can judge according to outward appearance, would hereby both direct and encourage them, in their admissions to his table, to be satisfied with a justifiable profession, because they cannot discern the root of bitterness till it springs up.

IS IT I?—Ver. 19. 1. The disciples began to be "sorrowful." As the remembrance of our former falls into sin, so the fear of the like again, doth often much imbitter the comfort of our spiritual feasts, and damp our joy. Here were the bitter herbs, with which this passover feast was taken. 2. They began to be suspicious of themselves; they said "one by one, Is it I? And another said, Is it I?" They are to be commended for their charity, that they were more jealous of themselves than of one another. It is the law of charity, to "hope the best," 1 Cor. xiii. 5, 7, because we assuredly know, therefore we may justly suspect, more evil by ourselves than by our brethren. They are also to be commended for their acquiescence in what Christ said; they trusted more to his words than to their own hearts; and therefore do not say, "I am sure 'it is not I,'" but "'Lord, is it I?' see if there be such a way of wickedness in us, such a root of bitterness, and discover it to us, that we may pluck up that root, and stop up that way."

THE LORD'S SUPPER. See Luke xxii. 19.

THE AGONY IN THE GARDEN.—See Matt. xxvi. 36.

THE SLEEPY DISCIPLES.—Ver. 40—41. See how the infirmities of Christ's disciples return upon them, notwithstanding their resolutions, and overpower them notwithstanding their resistance; and what clogs those bodies of ours are to our souls, which should make us long for that blessed state in which they shall be no more our incumbrance. This second time he spake to them as before, but "they wist not what to answer him:" they were ashamed of their drowsiness, and had nothing to say in excuse for it. Or, they were so overpowered with it, that, like men between sleeping and waking, they knew not where they were or what they said. But, the "third time," they were bid to "sleep" if they would. "'Sleep on now, and take your rest." I have now no more occasion for your watching, you may sleep, if you will, for me." "It is enough;" we had not that word in Matthew, "You have had warning enough to keep awake, and would not take it, and now you shall see what little reason you have to be secure." ΑΠΕΧΕΙ, I discharge you from any further attendance; so some understand it; "Now 'the hour is come,' in which I knew you would all forsake me, even take your course;" as he said to Judas, "What thou doest, do quickly." The "Son of man" is now "betrayed into the hands of sinners," the chief priests and elders; those worst of sinners, because they made a profession of sanctity. "Come, 'rise up,' do not lie dozing there. 'Let us go' and meet the enemy, for 'lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand,' and I must not now think of making an escape." When we see trouble at the door, we are concerned to stir up ourselves to get ready for it.

THE CAPTURE OF JESUS.—Ver. 43—48. We have here the seizing of our Lord Jesus by the officers of the chief priests. This was what his enemies had long aimed at, they had often sent to "take him;" but he had escaped out of their hands, because "his hour was not come," nor could they now have taken him, had he not freely surrendered himself. He began first to suffer in his soul, but afterward suffered in his body, that he might satisfy for sin, which begins in the heart, but afterward makes the members of the body instruments of unrighteousness. 1. Here is a band of rude miscreants employed to "take" our Lord Jesus, and make him a prisoner; "a great multitude with swords and staves." At the head of this rabble is Judas, "one of the twelve," one of those that had been many years intimately conversant with our Lord Jesus, had prophesied in his name, and in his name cast out devils, and yet "betrayed" him. "How art thou fallen, O Lucifer!" 2. Men of no less figure than the "chief priests and the scribes," and "the elders," sent them, and set them on work, who pretended to expect the Messiah, and to be ready to welcome him; and yet, when he "is come," and has given undeniable proofs that he is he that "should come," because he doth not make court to them, nor countenance and support their pomp and grandeur, because he appears not as a temporal Prince, but sets up a spiritual kingdom, and preaches repentance, reformation, and a holy life. 3. Judas betrayed him "with a kiss;" abusing the freedom Christ used to allow his disciples, of kissing his cheek at their return, when they had been any time absent. He called him, "Master, Master, and kissed him;" he said, "Rabbi, Rabbi," as think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And [s]some began to spit on him, and to cover[9] his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophesy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

66 ¶ And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh [b]one of the maids[10] of the high priest:

67 And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with [c]Jesus of Nazareth.

68 But [d]he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; [f]and the cock crew.

69 And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

70 And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: [i]for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71 But [k]he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak.

72 And [l]the second time the cock crew. And [m]Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. [n]And *when he thought thereon, he wept.

Jesus, brought bound and accused before Pilate, 1, is delivered to be crucified, 15, hangeth between two thieves, 27, and is honourably buried, 42.

AND straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes, and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, [b]and delivered him to Pilate.

2 And Pilate asked him, [c]Art thou the King of the Jews? And he, answering, said unto him, Thou sayest it.

3 And the chief priests accused him of many things; but he answered nothing.

4 And Pilate asked him again, saying, [f]Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee.

5 But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

6 ¶ Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.[1]

7 And [l]there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

8 And the multitude, crying aloud, began to desire him to do as he had ever done unto them.

9 But Pilate answered them, saying, [k]Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

10 For he knew that the chief priests had delivered him for envy.

11 But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them.

12 And Pilate answered and said again unto them, What will ye then that I shall do unto him [o]whom ye call the King of the Jews?

13 And they cried out again, Crucify him.

14 Then Pilate said unto them, [p]Why, what evil hath he done? [q]And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him.

15 And so Pilate, [r]willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified.

16 And the soldiers led him away into the hall, called Pretorium; and they call together the whole band.

29 ¶ And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, if he had been now more respectful to him than ever. It is enough to put one for ever out of conceit with being called of man, "Rabbi, Rabbi," Matt. xxiii. 7, since it was with this compliment that Christ was betrayed. He bid them take him, and "lead him away safely." 4. They arrested him, and made him their prisoner. "They laid their hands on him," rude and violent hands, and "took him" into custody; triumphing, it is likely, that they had done that which had been often before attempted in vain.

CHRIST BEFORE CAIPHAS.—See Matt. xxvi. 63.

PETER'S FALL.—Ver. 66—72. We have here the story of Peter's denying Christ. 1. It began in keeping at a distance from him. Peter followed "afar off," and now was "beneath in the palace," at the lower end of the hall. Those that are shy of Christ are in a fair way to deny him. 2. It was occasioned by his associating with the high priest's servants, and sitting among them. They that think it dangerous to be in company with Christ's disciples, because thence they may be drawn in to "suffer for him," will find it much more dangerous to be in company with his enemies, because there they may be drawn in to "sin against him." 3. The temptation was, his being charged as a disciple of Christ; "Thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth." "This is one of them, for thou art a Galilean," one may know that by thy speaking broad. It doth not appear that he was challenged upon it, or in danger of being prosecuted as a criminal for it, but only bantered upon it, and in danger of being ridiculed as a fool for it. While the chief priests were abusing the Master, the servants were abusing the disciples. Sometimes the cause of Christ seems to fall so much on the losing side, that every body has a stone to throw at it, and even the abjects gather themselves together against it. When Job was on the dunghill, he was had in derision of those that were the "children of base men," Job xxx. 8. Yet all things considered, the temptation could not be called formidable; it was only a maid that casually cast her eye upon him, and, for aught that appears, without design of giving him any trouble, said, "Thou art one of them," to which he needed not to have made any reply, or might have said, "And if I be, I hope that is no treason." 4. The sin was very great; he "denied Christ before men," at a time when he ought to have confessed and owned him, and to have appeared in court a witness for him. Christ had often given notice to his disciples of his own sufferings; yet, when they came, they were to Peter as great a surprise and terror as if he had never heard of them before. 5. His repentance was very speedy. He repeated his denial thrice, and the third was worst of all, for then he "cursed" and "swore," to confirm his denial; and that third blow, which, one would think, should have stunned him, and knocked him down, startled him, and roused him up. Then the "cock crew" the second time, which put him in mind of his Master's words, the warning he had given him, with that particular circumstance of the "cock crowing twice;" by recollecting that, he was made sensible of his sin, and the aggravations of it; and when he thought thereon, he wept.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. JESUS BEFORE PILATE.—See Matt. xxvii. 11.

JESUS MOCKED.—Ver. 16—20. Pilate, to gratify the gay humour of his Roman soldiers, delivered him to them, to be abused and spitefully treated, while they were preparing for the execution. They called together the whole regiment that was then in waiting, and they went into an inner hall, where they ignominiously abused our Lord Jesus as a King, just as in the high priest's hall his servants had ignominiously abused him as a Prophet and Saviour. 1. Do kings wear robes of purple or scarlet? They "clothed him with purple." This abuse done to Christ in his apparel should be an intimation to Christians, not to make the putting on of apparel "their adorning," 1 Pet. iii. 4. Shall a purple or scarlet robe be matter of pride to a Christian, which was matter of reproach and shame to Christ? 2. Do kings wear crowns? They "platted a crown of thorns" and "put it on his head." A crown of straw or rushes would have been banter enough; but this was pain also. He wore the crown of thorns which we had deserved, that we might wear the crown of glory which he merited. Let us be taught by these thorns, as Gideon taught the men of Succoth, to hate sin, and be uneasy under it, and to be in love with Jesus Christ, who is here a Lily among thorns. If we be at any time afflicted with a "thorn in the flesh," let it be our comfort, that our great High Priest is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having himself known what "thorns in the flesh" meant. 3. Are kings attended with the acclamations of their subjects, "O king, live for ever?" That also is mimicked; they saluted him with "'Hail, King of the Jews;' such a Prince, and such a people, even good enough for one another." 4. Kings have sceptres put into their hand, marks of dominion, as the crown is of dignity; to resemble that, they put a "reed in his right hand." Those who despise the authority of the Lord Jesus, as not to be observed and obeyed, who regard not either the precepts of his word, or the threatenings of his wrath, do, in effect, "put a reed in his hand;" nay, and, as these here, "smite him on the head" with it, such is the indignity they do him. 5. Subjects, when they swear allegiance, were wont to kiss their sovereign; and this they offered to do, but instead of that, "spit upon him." 6. Kings used to be addressed upon the knee; and this also they brought into the jest, they "bowed the knee, and worshipped him;" this they did in scorn, to make themselves and one another laugh. We were by sin, become liable to "everlasting shame and contempt," to deliver us from which, our Lord Jesus submitted to this shame and contempt for us. He was thus 30 Save thyself, and come down from the cross.

31 Likewise also the chief priests, mocking, said among themselves, with the scribes, [n]He saved others; himself he cannot save.

32 Let [x]Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. [y]And they that were crucified with him reviled him.

33 ¶ And when the sixth hour was come, there was [z]darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour.

34 And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, [a]Eloi, Eloi,[4] lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, [b]why hast thou forsaken me?

35 And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, [c]he calleth Elias.

36 And one ran and filled a spunge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

37 And [5]Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghost.

38 And [h]the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

39 ¶ And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.

40 There were also [i]women looking on afar off: among whom was [m]Mary Magdalene, and [n]Mary the mother of James the less and of Joses, [o]and Salome;

41 (Who also, when he was in Galilee, followed him, and ministered unto him;) and many other women which came up with him unto Jerusalem.

42 ¶ And now, [q]when the even was come, (because it was the preparation,[6] that is, the day before the sabbath,)

43 Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor,[6] [s]which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.

44 And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and, calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

45 And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph.

46 And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, [t]and laid him in a sepulchre which was [u]hewn out of a rock, [b]and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

47 And Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of Joses, beheld where he was laid.

CHAP. XVI.

Christ's resurrection, 1. He appeareth to Mary Magdalene and others, 19; sendeth forth the apostles, 15, and ascendeth into heaven, 19.

AND when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him.

2 And [d]very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

3 And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4 And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away; for it was very great.

5 And [e]entering into the sepulchre, they saw [h]a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

6 And he saith unto them, [k]Be not affrighted. [l]Ye seek [m]Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: [n]he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him.

7 But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter,[1] that he goeth before you into Galilee: [p]there shall ye see him, as he said unto you.

8 And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.

9 ¶ Now, when Jesus was risen early, [t]the first day of the week, [u]he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, [x]out of whom he had cast seven devils.

10 And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept.

11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, [z]believed not.

12 ¶ After that, he appeared in another form[2] unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

13 And they went and told it unto the residue; [c]neither believed they them.

14 ¶ Afterward [d]he appeared unto the eleven as they sat [*]at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

15 And he said unto them, [g]Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

16 He [1]that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; [1]but he that believeth not shall be damned.

17 And these signs shall follow them that believe:[3] [n]In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; mocked, not in his own clothes, but in anothers, to signify that he suffered not for his own sin; the crime was ours, the shame his.

The Crucifixion.—See Matt. xxvii. 35.

Supernatural Darkness.—See Matt. xxvii. 45.

Christ's Complaint.—Ver. 34. Jesus did not complain of his disciples forsaking him, but of his Father's. 1. Because this "wounded his spirit;" and that is a thing "hard to bear," Prov. xviii. 14; this brought the waters into his soul, Ps. lxix. 1—3. 2. Because in this especially he was "made Sin for us;" our iniquities had deserved indignation and wrath upon the soul, Rom. ii. 7, and therefore Christ, being made a Sacrifice, underwent as much of it as he was capable of; and it could not but bear hard indeed upon him who had "laid in the bosom" of the Father from eternity, and was "always his Delight." These symptoms of divine wrath, which Christ was under in his sufferings, were like that fire from heaven which had been sent sometimes, in extraordinary cases, to consume the sacrifices; (as Lev. ix. 24; 2 Chron. vii. 1; 1 Kings xviii. 38;) and it was always a token of God's acceptance. The fire that should have fallen upon the sinner, if God had not been specified, fell upon the Sacrifice, as a token that he was so; therefore it now fell upon Christ, and extorted from him this loud and bitter cry. When Paul was to be offered, as a sacrifice for "the service of saints," he could joy and rejoice, Phil. ii. 17; but it is another thing to be offered as a sacrifice for the "sin of sinners."

Rending of the Vail.—Ver. 38. Just at that instant that Christ died upon "mount Calvary," the vail of the "temple" was "rent in twain from the top to the bottom." This spake a great deal, 1. Of terror to the unbelieving Jews; for it was a presage of the utter destruction of their church and nation, which followed not long after; it was like the cutting asunder of the "staff of beauty," (for this vail was exceedingly splendid and glorious, Exod. xxvi. 31,) and that was done at the same time when they gave for his price "thirty pieces of silver," Zech. xi. 10, 12,) to "break the covenant which he had made with that people." Now it was time to cry "Ichabod. The glory is departed from Israel." Some think that that story which Josephus relates, of the temple-door opening of its own accord, with that voice, "Let us depart hence," some years before the destruction of Jerusalem, is the same with this; but that is not probable: however, this had the same signification, according to that, Hos. v. 14, "I will tear, and go away." 2. It speaks a deal of comfort to all believing Christians, for it signified the consecrating and laying open to us of a "new and living way into the holiest," by the "blood of Jesus."

Joseph the Counsellor.—Ver. 42—46. Let us observe who it was that begged the body, and took care for the decent interment of it; it was "Joseph of Arimathea," who is here called an "honourable counsellor," a person of character and distinction, and in an office of public trust; some think in the state, and that he was one of Pilate's privy council; his post rather seems to have been in the church, he was one of the great Sanhedrim of the Jews, or one of the high priest's council. He was τοιχήμων βουλευτης,—a counsellor that conducted himself in his place as did become him. Those are truly honourable, and those only, in places of power and trust, who make conscience of their duty, and whose deportment is agreeable to their preferment. But here is a more shining character put upon him; he was one that "waited for the kingdom of God," the kingdom of grace on earth, and of glory in heaven, the kingdom of the Messiah. Note, Those who "wait for the kingdom of God," and hope for an interest in the privileges of it, must show it by their forwardness to own Christ's cause and interest, even then when it seems to be crushed and run down. Observe, Even among the "honourable counsellors" there were some, there was one at least, that waited for the kingdom of God, whose faith will condemn the unbelief of all the rest. This man God raised up for this necessary service, when none of Christ's disciples could, or durst, undertake it, having neither purse, nor interest, nor courage, for it. "Joseph went in boldly to Pilate;" though he knew how much it would affront the chief priests, who had loaded him with so much reproach, to see any honour done him, yet he "put on courage;" perhaps at first he was a little afraid, but τολμησας—taking heart on it, he determined to show this respect to the remains of the Lord Jesus, let the worst come to the worst. What a surprise it was to Pilate to hear that he was dead, (Pilate perhaps expecting that he would have saved himself, and come down from the cross,) especially that he was already dead, that one, who seemed to have more than ordinary vigour, should so soon yield to death. Every circumstance of Christ's dying was marvellous; for from first to last his name was called Wonderful.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. The Resurrection.—See Matt. xxviii. 1.

Peter Comforted.—Ver. 7. The woman must be sure to tell Peter. This is particularly taken notice of by this evangelist, who is supposed to have written by Peter's direction. If it were told the disciples, it would be told Peter, for, as a token of his repentance for disowning his Master, he still associated with his disciples; yet he is particularly named, "Tell Peter," for, 1. It will be good news to him, more welcome to him than to any of them; for he is in sorrow for sin, and no tidings can be more welcome to true penitents than to hear of the resurrection of Christ, because he rose again for "their justification." 2. He will be afraid lest the joy of this good news do not belong to him. Had the angel said only, "Go tell his disciples," poor Peter would have been ready to

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST LUKE.

THIS evangelist was the companion of the apostle Paul in all his labours and sufferings, during many years, probably till he suffered martyrdom (Acts xvi. 10; xxvii. 1, 2; xxviii. 7-10; Col. iv. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 11; Philem. 24). And as he wrote the Acts of the Apostles also, which conclude with a brief account of St Paul's imprisonment at Rome, we may be sure that he had the apostle's sanction to what he did; and we may infer with great probability, that this Gospel was written some time before that event. It certainly was extant at an early period, and was from the first received by the church as of Divine authority. St Luke is supposed to have been a man of learning previous to his being endued with spiritual gifts. His style is more pure and classical than that of the other evangelists, though not quite free from the Hebrew or Syriac idiom; but the simplicity of the manner in which he sets before the mind, as in a picture, the wonderful events which he records, and the talent which he manifests of fixing the attention and exciting the affections of his readers, by the most artless narrative, are so exquisite, that many have thought him, as a writer, capable of standing the competition with the most celebrated historians of Greece itself.

FORASMUCH as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of [a]those things which are most surely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, [c]and ministers of the word;

3 It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, [f]most excellent Theophilus,[1]

4 That thou [g]mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed.

5 THERE *was, in the days of Herod the king of Judea, a certain priest named Zacharias, [i]of the course of Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6 And they were both righteous before God, [l]walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

7 And [n]they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren; and they both were now [o]well stricken in years.

8 And it came to pass, that, while [p]he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9 According to the custom of the priest's office, [r]his lot was[2] to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

10 And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense.

11 And there [t]appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense.

12 And when Zacharias saw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13 But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zacharias: for thy prayer is heard; [a]and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John.[3]

14 And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.

15 For he shall be [d]great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong drink; and he shall be [f]filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb.

16 And [h]many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17 And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient [†]to the wisdom of the just; [o]to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

18 ¶ And Zacharias said unto the angel, Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.

19 And the angel answering, said unto him, [r]I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

20 And, behold, thou shalt be dumb,[4] and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, [u]because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.

21 And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the temple.

CONFIRMATORY MIRACLES.—Ver. 17, 18. Some particular signs are mentioned; 1. They shall "cast out devils;" this power was more common among Christians than any other, and lasted longer, as appears by the testimonies of Justin Martyr, Origen, Irenæus, Tertullian, Minutius Felix, and others, cited by Grotius on this place. 2. They shall "speak with new tongues," which they had never learned or been acquainted with; and this was both a miracle, (a miracle upon the mind,) for the confirming of the truth of the gospel, and a means of spreading the gospel among those nations that had not heard it.—Henry.

CHAP. I. RELATION OF LUKE'S GOSPEL TO THE PRECEDING ONES.—Ver. 1—4. Matthew and Mark are supposed to have written before Luke; but they could not be called many: and the former of them at least wrote from his personal knowledge, as well as under the guidance of the Holy Spirit; while the persons here mentioned had written from report. We must therefore understand the evangelist of some compilations that have long been lost: yet the persons who made them seem to have meant honestly; and those heretical gospels, which were propagated during the primitive times, were not intended.—We hence, however, learn that several persons had undertaken to publish orderly narratives of those things, which were most surely believed by Christians, or most fully proved to them, as having been really spoken and done: for the expression may be explained either of the evidence by which they were attested, or the assurance with which they were credited. These writers had collected their information from the testimony of those who had from the first been eye-witnesses of Christ's miracles, life, death, resurrection, and ascension, and who were ministers of the gospel, to declare them unto others: the apostles seem especially intended. But these histories had not been compiled with sufficient accuracy, and the evangelist was led to consider it as a service allotted him, to form a more exact and regular work of this kind; as he had accurately investigated the subject, and acquired a complete acquaintance with it, from the beginning of the gospel, in the conception and birth of John the Baptist. The word rendered "from the beginning" sometimes signifies from above; and some suppose that St. Luke intended to intimate that he had his information from God by immediate inspiration. We can, indeed, entertain no doubt but that he wrote under the superintending inspiration of the Holy Spirit; yet it does not seem that much stress can be laid upon this word, which is often used in another sense; nor is it necessary to contend that he had his knowledge from above, without the intervention of means or ordinary methods of information. This history he addressed to Theophilus, for his more full instruction in Christianity. Theophilus signifies a lover of God: he appears to have been a person of rank and authority; for the title, "most excellent," is the same in the original that is elsewhere addressed to the Roman governors. The title was given to Theophilus with greater propriety: but St. Paul's using it to Felix and Festus more fully proves that Christianity does not forbid us to give this kind of customary honour to persons in authority, whatever their character or religion may be. The word rendered instructed signifies catechized, and relates to the initiatory instruction in the first principles of Christianity, in which the converts were afterwards to be more fully taught and established.—"St. Luke thought not what was delivered by word of mouth only, even by the eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, sufficient to give Theophilus a knowledge of these things, without writing the Gospel. He held it not unlawful, or unfit for a layman, or any Christian, to read the Scriptures; nor such a one insufficient, by thus reading, to understand the things in which he had been instructed." [Whitby.]—Scott.

ZACHARIAS AND ELISABETH.—Ver. 5—7. Now that which is observed concerning Zacharias and Elisabeth is, 1. That they were a very religious couple. "They were both righteous before God;" they were so in his sight, whose judgment, we are sure, is "according to truth;" they were sincerely and really so. They are righteous indeed that are so "before God," as Noah in his generation, Gen. vii. 1. They approved themselves to him, and he was graciously pleased to accept them. It is a happy thing when those that are joined to each other in marriage, are both "joined to the Lord:" and it is especially requisite that the priests, the Lord's ministers, should with their yoke-fellows be "righteous before God," that they may be "examples to the flock," and rejoice their hearts. "They walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." (1.) Their being "righteous before God" was evidenced by the course and tenor of their conversations; they showed it not by their talk, but by their works; by the way they walked in, and the rule they walked by. (2.) They were of a piece with themselves; for their devotions and their conversations agreed. They walked not only in the "ordinances" of the Lord, which related to divine worship, but in the "commandments" of the Lord, which have reference to all the instances of a good conversation, and must be regarded. (3.) They were universal in their obedience; not that they never did in any thing come short of their duty, but it was their constant care and endeavour to come up to it. (4.) Herein, though they were not sinless, yet they were "blameless;" nobody 22 And when he came out, he could not speak unto them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple; for he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.

23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days of his ministration were accomplished, he departed to his own house.

24 And after those days his wife Elisabeth conceived, and hid herself five months,[5] saying,

25 Thus [b]hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, [c]to take away my reproach among men.

26 ¶ And in the sixth month [d]the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, 27 To [g]a virgin espoused to a man, whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary.

28 And the angel came in unto her, and said, [h]Hail,[6] thou that art [‡]highly favoured, [i]the Lord is with thee: [k]blessed art thou among women.

29 And when she saw him, [l]she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind [n]what manner of salutation this should be.

30 And the angel said unto her, [o]Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favour with God.

31 And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, [q]and shalt call his name JESUS.

32 He shall be great, and shall be called [s]the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall [t]give unto him the throne of his father David:

33 And he shall reign over [x]the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

34 Then said Mary unto the angel, [y]How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?

35 And the angel answered and said unto her, [z]The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also [a]that holy thing, which shall be born of thee, shall be called [b]the Son of God.

36 And, behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren.

37 For [d]with God nothing shall be impossible.

38 And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word. And the angel departed from her.

39 ¶ And Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill-country with haste, into a city of Judah;[7]

40 And entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth.

41 And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb; and Elisabeth [h]was filled with the Holy Ghost:[8]

42 And she spake out with a loud voice, and said, [i]Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb.

43 And whence is this to me, that the mother of [m]my Lord should come to me?

44 For, lo, as soon as the voice of thy salutation sounded in mine ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy.

45 And blessed is she [§]that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord.

46 ¶ And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord,

47 And my spirit hath rejoiced in [q]God my Saviour.

48 For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth [9]all generations shall call me blessed.[9]

49 For he that is mighty hath done to me great things; [x]and holy is his name.

50 And [y]his mercy is on them that fear him from generation to generation.

51 He hath shewed strength with his arm: he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52 He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.

53 He hath [d]filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away.

57 ¶ Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered; and she brought forth a son.

58 And [i]her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; [k]and they rejoiced with her.

59 And it came to pass, that on the eighth day[10] they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother answered and said, [m]Not so; but he shall be called John.

61 And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62 And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called.

63 And he asked for a writing-table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64 And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and praised God.

could charge them with any open, scandalous sin; they lived honestly and inoffensively, as ministers and their families are in a special manner concerned to do, that the ministry be not blamed in their blame. 2. That they had been long "childless." Children are a "heritage of the Lord." But there are many of his heirs in a married state that yet are denied this "heritage;" they are valuable desirable blessings; yet many there are who are "righteous before God," and if they had children, would bring them up in his fear, who yet are not thus blessed, while the "men of this world" are "full of children," Ps. xvii. 14, "and send forth their little ones like a flock," John xxi. 11. Elisabeth was "barren," and they began to despair of ever having children, for they were both now "well stricken in years," when the women that have been most fruitful leave off bearing. Many eminent persons were born of mothers that had been long childless, as Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Samson, Samuel, and so here John Baptist—to make their birth the more remarkable, and the blessing of it the more valuable to their parents; and to show that when God keeps his people long waiting for mercy, he sometimes is pleased to recompense them for their patience, by doubling the worth of it when it comes.

THE VIRGIN MARY.—Ver. 26. We have here an account given of the mother of our Lord, of whom he was to be born, whom, though we are not to pray to, yet we ought to praise God for. 1. Her name was Mary, the same name with Miriam, the sister of Moses and Aaron; the name signifies exalted, and a great elevation it was to her indeed, to be thus favoured above all the daughters of the house of David. 2. She was a daughter of the Royal family, lineally descended from David, and she herself and all her friends knew it, for she went under the title and character of the "house of David," though she was poor and low in the world; and she was enabled by God's providence, and the care of the Jews, to preserve their genealogies, to make it out, and as long as the promise of the Messiah was to be fulfilled, it was worth keeping; but for those now who are brought low in the world to have descended from persons of honour, is not worth mentioning. 3. She was a virgin, a pure, unspotted one, but espoused to one of the same royal stock, like her, however, of low estate; so that upon both accounts there was (as it was fit there should be) an equality between them: his name was Joseph; he also was "of the house of David," Matt. i. 20. Christ's mother was a virgin, because he was not to be born by ordinary generation, but miraculously; it was necessary that he should be so, that though he must partake of the nature of man, yet not of the corruption of that nature; but he was born of a virgin espoused, made up to be married and contracted, to put honour upon the married state, that that might not be brought into contempt (which was an ordinance in innocency) by the Redeemer's being born of a virgin. 4. She lived in Nazareth, a "city of Galilee," a remote corner of the country, and in no reputation for religion or learning, but which bordered upon the heathen, and therefore was called "Galilee of the Gentiles." Christ's having his relations resident there, intimates favour in reserve for the Gentile world. And Dr. Lightfoot observes, that Jonah was by birth a Galilean, and Elijah and Elisha very much conversant in Galilee, who were all famous "prophets of the Gentiles." The angel was sent to her from Nazareth. Note, No distance or disadvantage of place shall be a prejudice to those whom God has favours in store for. The angel Gabriel carries his message as cheerfully to Mary at Nazareth in Galilee as to Zacharias in the temple at Jerusalem.—Henry.

SONG OF MARY.—Ver. 46—55. Mary, being greatly animated and enlarged with holy affections by Elisabeth's address, and likewise under the immediate influence of the Spirit of prophecy, brake out, as in a transport of joy, admiration, and gratitude; declaring that her soul did most ardently extol and praise the Lord, and dictate to her tongue, whilst she celebrated his perfections and extolled his wonderful works; yea, her spirit within her exulted and rejoiced in God her Saviour. By this it is evident that she knew herself to be a sinner, who needed a Saviour, and who could no otherwise rejoice in God, than as she was interested in his salvation through the promised Messiah.—It is also supposed that "by God her Saviour" she meant that divine Person who was about to receive his human nature from her. She, however, added, that the Lord had graciously condescended to regard the low condition of his handmaid, who was very poor, obscure, and despised in the world, though descended from the stock of David; when the Messiah might have been expected to assume his human nature from one of more illustrious station, and more honoured among men. It was therefore greatly to be admired, that so mean a person should be so distinguished, that every generation to the end of time would deem her happy beyond all other women: for the Almighty God, who disposeth of his favours as he seeth good, had done great things for her, such as had never before been heard of or experienced: and as his name was holy, and his perfections infinite, so she could not doubt of his accomplishing his promises, and fulfilling his work of mercy, purity, and righteousness, which he had thus begun. Indeed, his mercy had always been extended towards his humble worshippers and servants, in every generation, and would be to the end of the world; and was only withheld from the proud, impenitent, and unbelieving. He had in former ages often shown his power in protecting and delivering his people; and in scattering the numerous armies, or formidable confederacies, of his haughty enemies; confounding them even in those sagacious schemes which they had framed according to the imagination of their hearts. Thus he had dethroned proud and prosperous monarchs, as Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, and Belshazzar; and had exalted such persons as were of low

Augustus taxeth all the Roman empire, 1. Christ's nativity, 6; his circumcision, 22. Simeon and Anna prophesy of Christ, 28, 36.

AND it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from [a]Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be [*]taxed.[1]

2 (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

3 And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

4 And [f]Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem, (because he was of the house and lineage of David,)

5 To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

6 And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7 And [n]she brought forth her first-born son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.[2]

8 ¶ And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping [*]watch[3] over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, [s]and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, [x]I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be [y]to all people.

11 For [z]unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, [b]which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel [c]a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14 [d]Glory to God in the highest, [e]and on earth peace, [h]good will toward men.

15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the [*]shepherds said one to another, [k]Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

16 And they came with haste, and [m]found Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.

17 And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.

18 And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

19 But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20 And the shepherds returned, [q]glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

21 ¶ And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, [s]his name was called JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

22 And when [t]the days of her purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord;[4]

[*] Or, the night watches.

[3] It is sufficiently known that the night was divided into several watches, enumerated by St Mark xiii. 35—the evening, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning; the first ending at nine in the evening, the second at twelve, the third at three, the fourth at six in the morning: as the day is divided into the third, sixth and twelfth hours.—Elsley.

estate and humble minds, as Joseph, David, and Daniel. He had also been used to feast the poor and hungry with the bounty of his providence, whilst the rich were impoverished and reduced to deep distress: and this was an emblem of the methods of his grace, in abasing the proud and exalting the humble; and in feasting, enriching, and comforting those who hungered and thirsted for spiritual blessings; whilst the self-wise and self-righteous were left destitute of all real good, and sent away without any communications of light, peace, or holiness, to their souls. Thus he had in former ages helped and succoured in extreme distress his people Israel, when they humbly cried to him: and thus he was about to help them at that time, by fulfilling his promises concerning the Messiah, when they were sunk very deep in depravity, and in abject slavery to their enemies. This would be done out of regard to his mercy, according to his former unmerited kindness to that nation; and in accomplishment of his promises which he had graciously made to their fathers; especially to Abraham, with relation to himself and his posterity; and that seed in particular, "in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed."

Birth of John the Baptist.—Ver. 57—66. The neighbours and relations of Elisabeth had no doubt previously heard of her pregnancy; but when the Lord had magnified his mercy, in making her the joyful mother of a hopeful son, they rejoiced with her, and cordially congratulated her on so unexpected a blessing. On the eighth day many of them met together, to attend on the circumcision of the child according to the law: and as it was customary to give children their names at that time, (perhaps with reference to Abram's being called Abraham when circumcision was appointed;) some of them proposed that the child should be called Zacharias. We find no instance in Scripture of any one called after the name of his father; but it seems that it was then become customary, and they meant it out of respect to Zacharias, especially as he was advanced in years. But Elisabeth would by no means agree to this, declaring that he should be called John; at which they expressed their surprise, as none of the family bare that name. Zacharias, being deaf and dumb, probably spent his time in retirement and devotion, patiently expecting the termination of his chastisement; and having given Elisabeth some intimation of the heavenly vision, he seems hitherto to have left the whole matter to her. But the difference of opinion between her and her friends caused them, "by signs," to apply to him to determine it; and he, in the same manner, desiring a written tablet, wrote that the child's name was John, that being a settled point, which was by no means to be disputed.—Scott.

Chap. II. The Roman Census.—Ver. 2. "It is added, that this was 'the first enrolling,' to distinguish it from another, Acts v. 37, the same which Josephus and Eusebius speak of, and place under Cyrenius also; but differing from this here. As for Cyrenius having rule over Syria at this time; that is to be taken in a looser, not stricter sense. Not that Cyrenius was there now the standing governor under the Romans; but sent by the emperor, particularly on this occasion, to take an inventory of this part of the empire.* So saith Suidas, out of some ancient author; Cæsar Augustus, desiring to know the strength and state of his dominions, sent twenty chosen men,—one into one part, another into another, to take this account, and Publius Sulpitius Quirinius had Syria for his province." [Hammond.]—Justin Martyr calls this Cyrenius the first procurator of Cæsar in Judea; namely on this account, that he was sent to make this survey, in Judea and Syria, even during the life of Herod the Great. [Beza.]—Saturninus was the resident governor of Syria at this time, and Tertullian says, that this survey was entrusted to him: and it is doubted by some learned men, whether the word rendered governor is ever used in that sense, which the above interpretation requires. "When Judea was put under a Roman procurator, then taxes were first paid to the Romans, and Publius Sulpitius Quirinius, who is in Greek called Cyrenius, was governor of Syria: so that there were two distinct particular actions, in this matter, done at two distinct and different times; the first, the making the survey, and the second the levying the tax thereupon. And what is in the first verse of the second chapter of St. Luke is to be understood in the former; and what is in the second verse only of the latter. And this reconciles that evangelist with Josephus; for it is manifest from that author, that Cyrenius was not governor of Syria, or any tax levied upon Judea, till Archelaus was deposed. And therefore the making of this description, cannot be that which was done while Cyrenius was governor of Syria; but the levying the tax thereon certainly was." [Prideaux.]—"This was the first enrolment made by Quirinius, governor of Syria." [Lardner.]—This very learned author, who has fully discussed the subject, supposes that there were two enrolments made by Quirinius; and that he is called the governor of Syria, though not then advanced to that dignity, because he was afterwards thus distinguished: and there seems no objection to this conclusion, except the testimony of Tertullian, above mentioned, which is far from being entitled to implicit credence.—The second enrolment, or the levying of the taxes on the Jews, after the deposition of Archelaus, excited most dreadful commotions, and was an introduction to those seditions and insurrections which at length brought destruction on Jerusalem, and unspeakable calamities on the Jews.

26 And [b]it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen [d]the Lord's Christ.

27 And he came [e]by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law,

28 Then took he him up in his arms, [l]and blessed God, and said,

29 Lord, [k]now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word:

30 For [m]mine eyes have seen thy salvation,

31 Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

32 A [o]light to lighten the Gentiles, [p]and the glory of thy people Israel.

33 And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him.

34 And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall [t]and rising again of many in Israel; and [u]for a sign which shall be spoken against;

38 And she, coming in that instant, [f]gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that [g]looked for redemption in *Jerusalem.

39 ¶ And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

40 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and [n]the grace of God was upon him.

41 ¶ Now his parents [o]went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover.

43 And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they, supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

47 And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers.

48 And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing.

CHAP. III.

John's preaching and baptism, 1; his testimony of Christ, 15. Herod imprisoneth John, 19. Christ is baptized, 21; his genealogy, 25.

NOW, in the fifteenth year of the reign of [a]Tiberius Cesar, [b]Pontius Pilate being governor of Judea, [c]and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and [d]his brother Philip tetrach of Iturea and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene,

2 [e]Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests,[1] [f]the word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness.

3 And he came into all the country about Jordan, [1]preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins;

4 As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, [1]Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

5 Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth;

6 And [o]all flesh[2] shall see the salvation of God.

7 Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of other babe could be found in so mean a situation. No sooner had the angel finished this address to the poor shepherds, than he was visibly joined by a multitude of the heavenly hosts or of the angelic armies; who, being filled with inexpressible admiration of the love of God, and the display of all his glorious perfections in this surprising transaction, audibly celebrated his praises with triumphant acclamations, saying, "Glory to God in the highest," &c.: implying that this was the grand display of the Divine glory, and superior to all that they had ever witnessed. They therefore called on all the inhabitants of the highest heavens, to praise God in their loftiest strains of adoration; for now peace was prepared for the earth, which had so long lain in a state of rebellion, enmity, discord, and misery: peace inward and outward, with God and with each other, would be found on earth, through the gracious work of the divine Peace-maker, whom the Father, out of mere good-will to fallen man, had provided and sent among them.—This seems the purport of these angelic praises; but the abrupt, sententious manner, in which they were delivered, whilst it rendered them more suited to their fervent acclamations, increases the difficulty of unfolding the full meaning of each expression.

Simeon.—Ver. 25—32. The Jewish priests and scribes remained ignorant of the birth of their promised Messiah, till some time after this. But there was a small remnant, who had more spiritual views and hopes; and to them the Lord gave intimations of what had taken place. Among these was Simeon, concerning whom many vain conjectures have been formed by those, who want to represent the eminent believers mentioned in the Bible, as persons that stood high in the world's esteem; but of whom we know no more than is here recorded. He was a man of remarkable equity and piety, who expected the coming of the Messiah, as the consolation of Israel, and the source of all their hopes and comforts. Simeon was likewise endued with the Spirit of prophecy, (which had begun to be restored, after a suspension of about four hundred years from the days of Malachi:) and by immediate inspiration he was assured, that he should not die till he had seen the Lord's Christ, or anointed, the promised Messiah. Thus under the guidance of the Holy Spirit he came to the temple, at the very time when Joseph and Mary presented Jesus there; and so he witnessed the first accomplishment of a remarkable prophecy concerning him. Seeing, therefore, the infant Redeemer, and knowing him by the revelation of the Holy Spirit, he took him in his arms, and blessed God for his mercies to him and to his people; expressing himself willing, nay, desirous, to die, seeing the Lord now let him depart in peace, having favoured him with the sight of "his salvation." The Lord Jesus was thus called, because the whole salvation of a sinner centres in his person, as "God manifest in the flesh;" all the purposes and promises of salvation had reference to him; he purchased all the blessings of it by his blood; they are all treasured up in him, and dispensed by him to believers; and they are all applied through the operation of the Holy Spirit, who gives to us through his intercession.—Thus Simeon acknowledged Jesus "as God's Salvation, which he had prepared before the face of all people."

The Child Jesus.—Ver. 41—52. These verses contain all that the Spirit of God has seen good to record concerning the childhood and youth of the Divine Saviour; though we should have expected a more adequate gratification of our curiosity on so extraordinary a subject. Joseph, his supposed father, and Mary his mother, used to go up to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover. Perhaps Joseph went up at the other great feasts; but though the women were not required, yet Mary, and many others, who loved the ordinances of God, used to attend at the feast of the passover. And when Jesus was twelve years old, he went up with them; for it seems to have been the custom for young persons to accompany their parents at that age. When the days of unleavened bread were expired, they set out on their return home: and as great numbers came to Jerusalem from every part of the country, they journeyed in a great company; so that they departed without the child Jesus, who tarried behind, being engaged with the sacred ordinances and conversation, which attended the observation of the festival. Perhaps there was some culpable inattention in Joseph and Mary; for they took it for granted that he was in the company, among some of their neighbours and relations, who doubtless greatly delighted in his conversation; so that they travelled a whole day's journey before they missed him. But when they could not find him, they returned to Jerusalem, with great anxiety and under many apprehensions: and at length, (after two days spent in journeying and returning,) on the third day, probably towards night, they found him, not in the house of any acquaintance, nor in such places as young people generally frequent; but in some court or chamber of the temple, sitting amongst the doctors or teachers of the law; diligently hearkening to their discussions and instructions, modestly proposing questions to them on various subjects, and pertinently answering such inquiries as were put to him; and this he did with such wisdom and propriety, that all who heard him were astonished and delighted with him.

CHAP. III. John the Baptist.—See Matt. iii. 1; and Mark i. 3.

John's Faithful Preaching.—Ver. 11—14. Now John gives answer to each, according to their place and station. 1. He tells the people their duty, and that is to be charitable. "He that has two coats," and, consequently, one to spare, let him "give," or "lend" at least, "to him that has none," to keep him warm. Perhaps he saw, among his hearers, some that were overloaded with clothes, while others were ready to perish in rags, and he puts those who had superfluities, upon contributing to the relief

STIMONY TO JESUS.—Ver. 17. They thought that a wonderful power went hn; but what was that, compared with the power which Jesus would come

1. John can do no more than "baptize with water," in token of this, ht to purify and cleanse themselves; but Christ can, and will, "baptize y Ghost;" he can give the Spirit, to cleanse and purify the heart, not only as "water" washes off the "dirt" on the outside, but as "fire" purges out the "dross" that is within, and "melts down" the metal, that it may be cast into a "new mould." 2. John can only preach a "distinguishing doctrine," and by word and sign "separate between the precious and the vile;" but Christ hath his "fan in his hand," with which he can, and will, perfectly part between the wheat and the chaff; he will "thoroughly purge his floor," it is "his own," and therefore he will "purge" it, and will cast out of his church the unbelieving impenitent Jews, and confirm in his church all that faithfully follow him. 3. John can only "speak comfort" to those that receive the gospel, and, like other prophets, "say to the righteous" that "it shall be well with them;" but Jesus Christ will "give them comfort." John can only promise them that they shall be safe; but Christ will make them so, he will "gather the wheat into his garner;" good, serious, solid people he will gather now into his church on earth, which shall be made up of such, and he will shortly gather them into his church in heaven, where they shall be for ever sheltered.

GENEALOGY IN LUKE.—Ver. 23—38. Jesus is here said to have begun to be about thirty years of age at his baptism; or perhaps to have begun, or entered upon, his public ministry by being baptized of John, when he was about thirty years old. This single expression of an inspired writer outweighs all the specious conjectures of learned men, concerning the duration of our Lord's ministry; and if he was crucified in the year A. D. 33, it must have lasted longer than they generally allow; but the word about and the decimal number, concur in warranting an opinion, that he was rather above thirty, at this time.—There seems no reason to doubt, that the following is the genealogy of Jesus in the line of Mary: but as the names of men alone, or chiefly, stood in public registers; so the name of Joseph, not that of Mary, must have been inserted. It is therefore added that Jesus was supposed to be the son of Joseph, which may refer to the legal constitution, as well as to the common opinion of the Jews, as he was born of Mary after she was married to Joseph. Joseph's father was called Jacob, Matt. i. 16: but marrying the daughter of Heli, and being perhaps adopted by him, he was called his son, and as such his name seems to have been inserted in the public registers; and so the pedigree is carried backward in the line of Nathan to David, and from him to Adam, who was the Son of God as created by him in his own image, though he soon lost it by sin. Some of the same names indeed occur, which are in Joseph's genealogy; but as different persons often bear the same name, it seems needless to perplex ourselves about so common a case. Indeed, Joseph could not, in the male line, be descended both from Solomon and Nathan. Yet the arguments urged to prove, that this is Joseph's genealogy, not Mary's, seem formed on the supposition that the female line was excluded.—Cainan, 36, is not

CHAP. IV.

Christ's temptation and victory, 1. He beginneth to preach, 14. The people of Nazareth admire him, 16. He cureth divers sick, 33.

AND [a]Jesus, being [b]full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan, [c]and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2 Being forty days [f]tempted of the devil.[1] And in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3 And the devil said unto him, [i]If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, It is written, [l]That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And the devil, [m]taking him up into an high mountain, shewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, [o]All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them, for that is delivered unto me; [q]and to whomsoever I will I give it.

7 If thou therefore wilt *worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, [r]Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him [t]only shalt thou serve.

9 And he [u]brought him to Jerusalem, and set him [x]on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, [y]If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

10 For it is written, [a]He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee;

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

12 And Jesus answering, said unto him, It is said, [b]Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And [c]when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a season.

14 ¶ And Jesus [d]returned in the power of the Spirit[2] into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their synagogues, [e]being glorified of all.

16 ¶ And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and stood up[3] for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him [l]the book of the prophet Esaias: and when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

18 The [n]Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath [o]anointed me [p]to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent [q]me to heal the broken-hearted, [r]to preach deliverance to the captives, [s]and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised;

19 To [u]preach the acceptable year[4] of the Lord.

20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.

21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

22 And all bare him witness, and wondered at [b]the gracious words[5] which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, [c]Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, [d]Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country.

24 And he said, Verily I say unto you, [h]No prophet is accepted in his own country.

25 But I tell you of a truth, [i]many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, [k]when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, [l]save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

27 And many lepers were in Israel in the time of [m]Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, [n]saving Naaman the Syrian.

28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath,

29 And rose up, and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the *brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong.

30 But he, [r]passing through the midst of them, went his way,

31 And [s]came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, [t]and taught them on the sabbath-days.

32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for his word was with power.[6]

33 ¶ And in the synagogue there was a man which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice,

34 Saying, [t]Let us alone; [y]what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; [a]the Holy One of God.

35 And [b]Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had [c]thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36 And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

found in the Hebrew text of the Bible in any of the genealogies, but only in the Septuagint, whence it seems to have been inserted in the registers: these, it is probable, the evangelists transcribed, as sufficiently exact for their purpose, and as more generally suited to command attention than if they had altered them, and even rendered them more accurate.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. TEMPTATION OF JESUS.—See Matt. iv. 1.

CHRIST PREACHING.—Ver. 14—17. Observe, 1. The opportunity he had for it; "He came to Nazareth" when he had gained a reputation in other places, in hopes that thereby something at least of the contempt and prejudice with which his countrymen would look upon him, might be worn off. There he took occasions to preach, (1.) In the "synagogue," the proper place, where it had been "his custom" to attend when he was a private person. We ought to attend on the public worship of God, as we have opportunity. But now that he was entered upon his public ministry, there he preached. Where the multitudes of fish were, there this wise Fisherman would cast his net. (2.) On the Sabbath-day, the proper time, which the pious Jews spent, not in a mere ceremonial rest from worldly labour, but in the duties of God's worship, as of old they frequented the schools of the prophets, on the "new moons" and the "Sabbaths." Note, It is good to keep Sabbaths in solemn assemblies. 2. The call he had to it. (1.) He "stood up to read." They had in their synagogues seven readers every Sabbath, the first a priest, the second a Levite, and the other five, Israelites of that synagogue. We often find Christ "preaching" in other synagogues, but never "reading," except in the synagogue of Nazareth, of which he had been many years a member; now he offered his service as he had perhaps often done; he read one of the lessons out of the prophets, Acts xiii. 15. Note, The reading of the Scripture is very proper work to be done in religious assemblies; and Christ himself did not think it any disparagement to him to be employed in it. (2.) The "book of the prophet Esaias was delivered to him," either by the ruler of the synagogue, or by the minister mentioned, ver. 20, so that he was no intruder, but duly authorised pro hac vice—on this occasion. The second lesson for "that" day being in the prophecy of Esaias, they gave him that volume to read in. 3. The text he preached upon; He "stood up to read," to teach us reverence in "reading" and "hearing" of the word of God. When Ezra opened the book of the law, "all the people stood up;" Neh. viii. 5, so did Christ here, when he read in the book of the prophets. Now the book being "delivered to him," (1.) He "opened" it. The books of the Old Testament were in a manner "shut up" till Christ opened them, Isa. xxix. 11. Worthy "is the Lamb that was slain, to take the book and open the seals;" for he can open not the book only, but the understanding. (2.) He "found" the place which was appointed to be read "that day" in course, which he needed not to be directed to; he soon found it, and read it, and took it for his text; now his text was taken out of Isa. lxi. 1, 2, which is here quoted at large, ver. 18, 19. There was a providence in it, that that portion of Scripture should be read that day, which speaks so very plainly of the Messiah, that they might be left inexcusable, who "knew him not," though they heard "the voices of the prophets" read "every Sabbath-day," which bare witness of him, Acts xiii. 27. This text gives a full account of Christ's undertaking, and the work he came into the world to do.—Henry.

CHRIST'S REJECTION AT NAZARETH.—Ver. 23—32. As the thoughts of the Nazarenes were fully known to our Lord, he told them, that he was aware they were disposed to use the common proverb, "Physician, heal thyself," with relation to him: intimating, that if indeed he were able to perform cures, he ought to have begun with healing the diseases of his old neighbours; or at least that he ought now to do such miracles among them, as he had wrought at Capernaum, if he expected any regard from them. Thus they wanted to dictate to him, or to cavil at his ministry, because he did not comply with their humour, or pay court to them: nay, they spake as if they had a just claim to his miraculous cures in preference to others. He therefore now first applied to them that proverb, which hath already been considered, for having known him in a situation, externally perhaps inferior to their own, they could not endure to be warned and instructed by him, or admit of his superiority over them. But he further observed, that he had a right to dispense his favours as he saw good; and that in working miracles at other places rather than at Nazareth, he did the same as the ancient prophets had done: for in the terrible famine, which took place in the days of Elijah, that prophet was not sent to relieve any of the poor destitute widows of Israel, but only to one who was of Gentile extraction: and in like manner Elisha cleansed none of the lepers of Israel, but only exerted his miraculous power upon Naaman a Syrian. So that if he had not only given Capernaum the preference to Nazareth, but had even neglected them, and conferred his favours on the Gentiles, they could not have objected to his conduct without condemning these two prophets. But though their prejudices and unbelief were the real reasons that they were not favoured equally with other cities; yet this declaration of our Lord, that he had a right to work his miracles where he pleased, exceedingly enraged them, as if it had been an inexcusable injustice! They therefore forgot the holiness of the day, and the religious purposes for which they were assembled; and rising up with one consent, they thrust him out of the synagogue, and even out of the city; hurrying him away to the brink of a precipice, that they might cast him down and dash

Peter's mother-in-law healed.

37 And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

38 ¶ And he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house: and Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her.

39 And he stood over her, [i]and rebuked the fever; and it left her: and immediately she arose and ministered unto them.

40 ¶ Now, [l]when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; [m]and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41 And devils also came out of many, [n]crying out, and saying, [o]Thou art Christ, the Son of God. And he, rebuking them, suffered them not [p]to *speak: for they knew that he was Christ.

42 And [q]when it was day, he departed, and went into a desert place; and the people sought him, and came unto him, [r]and stayed him,[7] that he should not depart from them.

43 And he said unto them, [s]I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for [t]therefore am I sent.

44 And [u]he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

AND it came to pass, that, [a]as the people pressed upon him to hear the word of God, he stood by [b]the lake of Gennesaret,

2 And saw two ships standing by the lake: but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were [c]washing their nets.

3 And he entered into one of the ships, [d]which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land. And [e]he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4 Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, [f]Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon answering, said unto him, Master, [g]we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: [h]nevertheless, at thy word I will let down the net.

6 And when they had this done, [1]they inclosed a great multitude of fishes; and their net brake.[1]

7 And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, [k]that they should come and help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

8 When Simon Peter saw it, [l]he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, [m]Depart from me, for [n]I am a sinful man, O Lord.

Christ cleanseth the leper.

9 For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken:

10 And so was also James and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; [r]from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, [s]they forsook all, and followed him.

12 ¶ And it came to pass, when he was in a certain city,[2] behold a man full of leprosy; who, seeing Jesus, fell on his face, and besought him, saying, Lord, [t]if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, [u]I will; be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to tell no man: but go, and shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

15 But so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: [v]and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16 ¶ And [w]he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

17 And it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching, [x]that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jerusalem; and [y]the power of the Lord was present to heal them.[3]

18 ¶ And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the house-top, and let him down through the tiling, with his couch, into the midst before Jesus.

20 And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, [z]Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

21 And the scribes and the Pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this which speaketh blasphemies? [a]Who can forgive sins but God alone?

22 But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he answering, said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?

23 Whether is easier to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?

24 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath [b]power[4] upon earth to forgive sins, (he said unto the sick of the palsy,) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go unto thine house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, [c]glorifying God.

him to pieces. But he miraculously eluded their attempt; and passing unobserved through the midst of them, went to Capernaum, where he proceeded to teach the people with surprising authority and energy.—"When they heard Christ declaring them unworthy of the benefit of those miracles which he had done at Capernaum, and plainly intimating, that this gospel should chiefly be received among the Gentiles, they, in a furious zeal, seek to destroy him." [Whitby.]—"The inhabitants of the cities, in which our Lord's miracles were principally wrought, were unworthy of them;" chap. x. 13—15; Matt. xi. 21—28: but their prejudices were not so strong as those of the Nazarenes, nor were they disposed to persecute him; and there were more believers among them, than at Nazareth. But, in fact, the indignation shown on this occasion, was excited by the doctrine of the Divine sovereignty. "May I not do what I will with my own?" May I not confer unmerited favours on whom I will, without doing injustice to those who do not share them? The doctrine, which is supported against all objections by these questions, offended the men of Nazareth, as it ever did, and ever will, offend those who "have not submitted to the righteousness of God."—Scott.

CHAP. V. MIRACULOUS DRAUGHT OF FISHES.—Ver. 1—10. The draught of fish they caught, was so much beyond what was ever known, that it amounted to a miracle. They "enclosed a great multitude of fishes," so that "their net brake," and yet, which is strange, they did not lose their draught; it was so great a "draught," that they had not hands sufficient to draw it up; but they were fain to beckon to their partners, who were at a distance, out of call, to come and help them. But the greatest evidence of the vastness of the draught, was, that they filled both the ships with fish, to that degree, that they overloaded them, and they "began to sink," so that the fish had like to have been lost again with their own weight; so many an overgrown estate, raised out of the water, returns to the place whence it came. Suppose these ships were but five or six tons a piece; what a vast quantity of fish must there be to "load," nay to "overload," them both! Now by this vast draught of fishes, 1. Christ intended to show his "dominion" in the "seas" as well as on the "dry land;" over its "wealth" as over its "waves." Thus he would shew that he was that "Son of man," under whose feet all things were put, and particularly the "fish of the sea," and "whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea," Ps. viii. 8. 2. He intended further to confirm the doctrine he had just now preached to the people, by a new miracle, that the people as shore, who heard the [illegible] of God, carefully attended his motions afterward, and stayed halting about there, to see what he would do next, and this miracle, immediately following, would be a confirmation to their faith, of his being at least "a Teacher come from God." 3. He intended hereby to repay Peter for the loan of his boat; for Christ's gospel now, as his ark formerly in the house of Obed-edom, will be sure to make rich amends, for its kind entertainment. None shall "shut a door" or "kindle a fire" in God's house "for nought," Mal. i. 10. Christ's recompences for services done to his name, are abundant, they are superabundant. 4. He intended hereby to give a specimen to those who were to be his ambassadors to the world, of the success of their embassy, that though they might for a time, and in one particular place, "toil," and "catch nothing," yet they should be instrumental to bring in many to Christ, and enclose many in the gospel-net.

PETER'S CONFESSION.—Ver. 8. This word of Peter's came from the same principle with theirs who, under the Old Testament, so often said that they did "exceedingly fear and quake" at the extraordinary displays of the divine glory and majesty. It was the language of Peter's humility and self denial, and had not the least tincture of the devil's dialect. "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God?" 1. His acknowledgment was very just, and what it becomes us all to make; "I am a sinful man, O Lord." Note, Even the "best men" are "sinful men," and should be ready on all occasions to own it, and especially to own it to Jesus Christ; for to whom else, but to him who came into the world to "save sinners," should "sinful men" apply themselves? 2. His inference from it was what "might have been" just, though really it was not so; If I be a "sinful man," as indeed I am, I ought to say, "'Come to me, O Lord,' or let me come to thee, or I am undone, 'for ever undone.'" But considering what re[illegible] "sinful men" have to tremble before the holy Lord God, and to dread his wrath, [illegible] may be well excused, if, in a sense of his own sinfulness and vileness, he cried out [illegible] sudden, "Depart from me." Note, Those whom Christ designs to admit to the [illegible] intimate acquaintance with him, he first makes sensible that they deserve to be set [illegible] greatest distance from him. We must all own ourselves "sinful men," and that there [illegible] Jesus Christ might justly "depart from us;" but we must "therefore fall down at [illegible] knees," to pray to him that he would not depart; for "woe unto us" if he "leave [illegible] if the Saviour depart from the sinful man.

26 And they were all amazed, [h]and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to-day.

27 ¶ And after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named Levi, sitting at the receipt of custom: and he said unto him, [i]Follow me.

28 And he [m]left all, rose up, and followed him.

29 ¶ And Levi made him a great feast in his own house: and there was a great company of publicans, and of others, that sat down with them.

30 But their scribes and Pharisees[5] murmured against his disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners?

31 And Jesus answering, said unto them, [q]They that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick.

32 I [r]came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

33 ¶ And they said unto him, Why do the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees; but thine eat and drink?

34 And he said unto them, Can ye make [u]the children of the bride-chamber fast while the [x]bridegroom is with them?

35 But the days will come, [y]when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, [z]and then shall they fast in those days.

36 ¶ And he spake also a parable unto them; No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old: if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles; and both are preserved.

39 No man also, having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new; for he saith, The old is better.

Concerning the disciples plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath, 1. Christ chooseth the twelve, 12, healeth divers diseases, 17, and preacheth, 20.

AND it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first,[1] that he went through the corn-fields; [c]and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, [d]Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath-days?

3 And Jesus, answering them, said, Have ye not read so much as this, what David did, when himself was an hungered, and they which were with him;

4 How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shew-bread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?

5 And he said unto them, [l]That the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

6 ¶ And it came to pass also on another sabbath, that he entered into the synagogue and taught: [m]and there was a man whose right hand was withered.

7 And the scribes and Pharisees watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath-day; [o]that they might find an accusation against him.

8 But he knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst. And he arose, and stood forth.

9 Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; [r]Is it lawful on the sabbath-days to do good, or to do evil? [s]to save life, or to destroy it?

10 And looking round about upon them all, he said unto the man, [u]Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11 And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus.

12 ¶ And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and [a]continued all night in prayer to God.[2]

13 And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose [c]twelve, whom also he named [d]apostles;

14 Simon, (whom he also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15 [l]Matthew and [k]Thomas, [l]James the son [m]of Alpheus, and [n]Simon called Zelotes,[3]

16 And [o]Judas the brother of James, [p]and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

17 ¶ And he came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea and Jerusalem, and from the sea-coast of Tyre and Sidon, [s]which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases;

18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

19 And the whole multitude [u]sought to touch him: [x]for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

20 ¶ And he lifted up his eyes[4] on his disciples, and said, Blessed be ye poor: [a]for yours is the kingdom of God.

[1] Considerable doubts have arisen respecting the meaning of the expression thus translated. In the original it is literally, "On the second-first Sabbath." Perhaps the best supported opinion is that which supposes it to mean, the Sabbath-day in the week of the passover. On the second day of the passover week took place the offering of the sheaf, or of the first-fruits of harvest (Lev. xxiii. 10-16); and from this day they reckoned seven Sabbaths, or fifty days, to the feast of Pentecost. Hence, "the second-first Sabbath" is the first Sabbath from this second day of the passover feast; and so the Sabbaths were probably reckoned in succession till the feast of Pentecost.—Lightfoot.

[4] This, though containing many like remarks, is not the same sermon as in Matthew: that was delivered on a mountain—this in a plain; that sitting—this standing; and there is a great difference in the expression when the parallel passages are compared.—Doddridge.

of John's disciples, when they did not become the disciples of Jesus, may be intended. True religion has been for substance the same, since the revelation of a Saviour to fallen man. Even the ritual law and the whole Mosaic dispensation were intended to answer special purposes for a season: Rom. 5. 20: and the traditions of the elders, with the ceremonies of the law, and many uncommanded plausible austerities, formed the religion of the strictest sect of the Jews, in our Lord's days, to which many of John's disciples, (as distinct from Christ's,) seem in great measure to have conformed. But Jesus came, to introduce another and better dispensation than even that of Moses, which was "waxing old and ready to vanish away;" as well as to vindicate the moral law, from the corrupt glosses and traditions of the Pharisees. He would not, therefore, allow his disciples to attempt a coalition between his religion and that of the Pharisees. Fasting, as far as obligatory and useful, would form a part of the new dispensation, and not be disgraced by the superstition, hypocrisy, and spiritual pride which then attended it. But, as things then were, it would be as absurd to retain any part of the old system, and to graft Christianity upon it, as to put new, undressed cloth on an old worn-out garment, or new fermenting wine, into old leather bottles. Thus the Jews, "going about to establish their own righteousness," and to shore up the old building by props and buttresses, refused to build on the foundation which God himself had laid. And this attempt at a coalition between the old and new dispensations, or rather between the religion of the Pharisees and that of Jesus, was the grand fault of the Judaizing teachers of Christianity, against whom St. Paul so zealously contended, especially in his epistle to the Galatians. They wanted to mend the pharisaical religion, which was as an old worn-out garment, with the gospel; and to put the new wine of the gospel into the old bottles of the antiquated ceremonies of the Mosaic law, and the traditions of the elders.—As this interpretation has never before been proposed, as far as I know, I suggest it with much diffidence; having never been satisfied with the interpretation generally given.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. Second Sabbath after the First.—Ver. 1—11. Some render the original words, "the second prime Sabbath;" supposing that the day of Pentecost was meant, and that it fell on the Sabbath-day. The three great feasts were, in many respects, observed as Sabbaths; for the first of unleavened bread began in the evening, after the close of the fourteenth day of the first month, about the time when the passover was eaten. But when either the first day of unleavened bread, or the day of Pentecost, or the first day of the feast of Tabernacles, fell on a Sabbath, it was reckoned peculiarly sacred. When the first day of unleavened bread fell thus, it was called "the first prime Sabbath;" the Pentecost falling thus was called "the second prime Sabbath;" and the first day of the feast of tabernacles, in this case, was called "the third prime Sabbath," This is the opinion of Grotius, Hammond, and many learned expositors.—But others render the words, "the first Sabbath after the second day of unleavened bread." From this day seven weeks were numbered, and then the Pentecost, or the feast of weeks, was observed. "The first Sabbath, from the second day of unleavened bread, was called deuteroproton; the second, deuterodeuteron, the second Sabbath from that day; the third, deuterotriton, the third Sabbath from that second day; and so on till they came to the seventh Sabbath from that day, that is the forty-ninth day, which was the day of Pentecost.—Epiphanius expressly says, our Lord's disciples did this on the Sabbath following the first day of unleavened bread. [Whitby.] If this interpretation be adopted the ears of corn plucked by the disciples must have been barley, for the wheat was not ripe till some time after. And though the offering of wave-loaves for the first-fruits, at the feast of Pentecost, Lev. xxiii. 17, shows that some of the harvest was then gathered in; yet it does not follow but that some might remain in the fields unreaped at the same time.—It should be observed, that in case there was no likelihood of any barley being fit to cut at the time when the passover would otherwise have been celebrated, a moon, or month, was intercalated, and so the beginning of the first month was fixed to the subsequent new moon; and by the passover all the other feasts were regulated.—These are the most probable opinions on this subject, which is evidently of greater difficulty than importance.

Sermon on the Plain.—Ver. 20. "The question," (namely, whether this be the same sermon with that on the mount,) "is of some concern for the right understanding of the words: for if the sermon be the same in both Gospels, and it were only spoken once by Christ, though it be set down twice by the evangelists, the words of one evangelist must be interpreted in a sense agreeable to the other, or else they cannot both be true. Whereas if our Lord spake the words recorded by St. Luke, at any other time and place than the discourse related by St. Matthew was delivered at, we may give different interpretations to their words: and that this was so seems highly probable. 1. Because St. Luke omits so many things recorded by St. Matthew, as parts of this discourse, namely, from the thirteenth to the thirty-ninth verse of the fifth chapter, all the sixth chapter; and from the seventh to the sixteenth verse of the seventh chapter: that is, he omits the greatest part of the sermon, and also adds many woes. 2. St. Matthew doth sufficiently inform us, that his sermon was delivered before the heal-

42 Either, how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

45 A good man, out of the good treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is good; [k]and an evil man, out of the evil treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

46 ¶ And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47 Whosoever [n]cometh to me, [o]and heareth my sayings, [p]and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like:

48 He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock.

49 But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that, without a foundation, built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

GENUINE AND PERMANENT PIETY.—Ver. 47—49. Those only make sure work for their souls and eternity, and take the course that will stand them in stead in a trying time, who do not only come to Christ as his scholars, and "hear his sayings," but do them; who think, and speak, and act, in every thing, according to the established rules of his holy religion. They are like a "house built on a rock;" these are they that take pains in religion, as they do that "build on a rock;" that begin low, as they do that "dig deep;" that found their hope upon Christ, who is the Rock of ages; (and other foundation can no man lay;) these are they who provide for hereafter, who get ready for the worst, who lay up in store a good foundation for the "time to come," for the "eternity to come," 1 Tim. vi. 19. They who do thus, do well for themselves; for 1. They shall keep their integrity, in times of temptation and persecution; when others fall from their own steadfastness, as the seed on the stony ground, they shall "stand fast in the Lord." 2. They shall keep their comfort, and peace, and hope, and joy, in the midst of the greatest distresses. The storms and streams of affliction shall not shock them, for their feet are "set upon a rock," a rock "higher than they." 3. Their everlasting welfare is secured. In death and judgment they are safe. Obedient believers are "kept by the power of Christ, through faith, unto salvation," and shall never perish.—Henry.

CHAP. VII. THE CENTURION'S FAITH.—See Matt. viii. 8.

THE WIDOW OF NAIN.—Ver. 11—17. It does not appear that our Lord ever went to Nain, except on this occasion. It is supposed to have been distant about twelve or thirteen miles from Capernaum; and he seems to have taken this journey on purpose to perform the compassionate miracle here recorded. For when he came with many attendants to the entrance of the city, he met a company of people carrying a dead man out to bury him. He was the only son of a widow woman, who, it may well be supposed, had been the support and comfort of her declining years, and every circumstance tended to render her affliction peculiarly distressing: and as the funeral was attended by great numbers, the miracle that ensued would be more fully attested, and generally known. When our Lord, therefore, saw the afflicted widow following the corpse of her beloved son, he had compassion on her, and bade her weep no more, as he was come to her relief; he then touched the bier on which the body lay, for they who carried it stood still; perhaps with some degree of expectation, as the rumour of his other miracles must have reached them. Upon which he said, as one possessed of divine authority and power, "Young man, I say unto thee, arise;" and immediately he that had been dead sat up, and began to speak, and Jesus delivered him to his mother, that he might still Anno Domini cir. 31.

6 Then [k]Jesus went with them. And when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to him, saying unto him, Lord, [l]trouble not thyself; [m]for I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof:

7 Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: [n]but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed.

8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto [*]one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

9 When Jesus heard these things, he marvelled at him, and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

10 And they that were sent, returning to the house, [s]found the servant whole that had been sick.

11 ¶ And it came to pass the day after, that [t]he went into a city called Nain;[2] and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now, when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out,[3] [u]the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

13 And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, [a]Weep not.

14 And he came and touched the [†]bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, [b]Young man,[4] I say unto thee, Arise.

15 And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. [c]And he delivered him to his mother.

16 And there came a fear on all: and [e]they glorified God, saying, That [f]a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That [g]God hath visited his people.

17 And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about.

18 ¶ And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

19 And John calling unto him two of his disciples, sent them to Jesus, saying, [l]Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

20 When the men were come unto him, they said, John Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

21 And in that same hour he cured many of their infirmities and [m]plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind he gave sight.

22 Then Jesus answering, said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, [r]the dead are raised, [s]to the poor the gospel is preached.

23 And [t]blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.

24 ¶ And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? [y]A reed shaken with the wind?

25 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26 But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, [c]and much more than a prophet.

27 This is he of whom it is written, [d]Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

28 For I say unto you, [e]Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist; [f]but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

29 And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, [g]justified God,[5] being baptized with the baptism of John.

30 But the Pharisees and lawyers [‡]rejected the counsel of God [§]against themselves, being not baptized of him.

31 ¶ And the Lord said, [k]Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32 They are like unto children sitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

33 For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, [o]He hath a devil.

34 The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35 But [r]wisdom is justified of all her children.

36 ¶ And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37 And, behold, a woman in the city,[6] [t]which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster-box of ointment,

38 And stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet[7] with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her live to be a comfort to her. The evangelist hath left us to conceive of the emotions of her heart on this occasion, to which no words could possibly do justice; but he informs us that an awe and fear of Christ's divine power fell upon the spectators: and they glorified God for his mercy, and thanked him for having visited his people, and raised up such a prophet amongst them. But though the rumour of this extraordinary miracle spread even in Judea, and through all the adjacent regions, yet we do not find that any one expected a similar miracle in the case of Jairus's daughter, chap. viii. 41—56.—"What can exceed the beautiful simplicity of these verses? In particular, that simple, yet touching enumeration, which occurs in the twelfth verse, is a pure classical beauty. Common writers either overlook such circumstances, and fail to arrange them in the delicate order which gives them their effect; or they dwell so much on them as to excite weariness and disgust. A similar instance occurs in the contrast towards the close of this chapter, ver. 44—46. Few minds are so acute in their first perceptions, as thus to catch every circumstance which properly enters into a parallel or a contrast, and to exclude all fanciful agreements and oppositions; and few who catch them can thus exhibit them without parade. This clearness of conception, united with such simple and unembarrassed communication, is, I conceive, true classical excellence."

JOHN'S EMBASSY TO JESUS.—See Matt. xi. 2.

CHRIST AT MEAT IN THE PHARISEE'S HOUSE.—Ver. 37—39. Whilst our Lord sat at the Pharisee's table, a woman of the city, who was of known bad character, having formerly been a harlot, as it is generally supposed, came into the room. Tradition reports that this was Mary Magdalene, but there is no other proof of it: and indeed what is said of Mary Magdalene, or Mary of Magdala, in other places, renders it improbable; as she is spoken of rather as one who had been remarkably afflicted, than peculiarly wicked. However that may be, this woman appears to have heard Christ's instructions with great attention; and to have been brought to a deep conviction of her guilt and danger, and to unfeigned repentance; and, being thus prepared to receive the truth, she seems to have perceived him to be the promised Messiah, a spiritual Redeemer, the Saviour of lost sinners. She therefore wanted to hear more of his encouraging instructions, and also to express her love and gratitude to him: and in the fulness of her heart she followed him into the Pharisees' house, having taken with her an alabaster-box of valuable ointment, which probably she had been accustomed before to use for far other purposes. Coming thus behind him as he reclined at meat, his presence and conversation so affected her with a remembrance of her former sins, and with a sense of his grace and mercy, that she wept abundantly: and as his feet were bare, (his sandals having been put off,) she rained tears plenteously upon them, wiping them at the same time with her neglected dishevelled tresses; and kissing them in the most humble, respectful, and affectionate manner, she anointed them with the ointment. But when the Pharisee saw this interesting scene, instead of rejoicing in these tokens of her repentance, he confined his thoughts entirely to her former scandalous character, and he began to form a disadvantageous opinion of Jesus, because he allowed such a woman to approach him; for he said in his heart, that if he were a prophet, he would have known her character, and consequently would have driven her from his presence, as he and his brethren the Pharisees would have done.—It is surprising that so many persons, (among whom have been several remarkable for learning and diligent investigation,) should have supposed that St. Luke here records the same event, which the other evangelists relate concerning Mary, the sister of Lazarus.—"This woman was a woman of that city, either of Nain or Capernaum, the only cities mentioned here; whereas Mary, the sister of Lazarus, was of the village of Bethany.—After the collation here mentioned, our Lord 'went through every city and village, preaching the kingdom of God,' chap. viii. 1: whereas after he raised Lazarus, 'Jesus walked no more openly,' John xi. 54. And, Mary's unction was made for Christ's interment, and but six days before his last passover, when he continued in Bethany and Jerusalem." [Whitby.]—"This was in one of the Pharisee's houses, not in Simon the leper's, nor in Bethany. The Pharisee objected against Christ for this; not Judas, or one of the disciples: and the objection was not the unnecessary expense, as there; but that Christ would let a sinner be so kind to him, if he knew it; or if he did not, that he was no prophet. And then the discourse betwixt Christ and Simon, is far distant from that in the other Gospels, of anointing him for his burial; which also contains another circumstance in it, that of Mary was immediately before his death, Judas going out immediately to betray him." [Hammond.] To this it may be added, that it is hardly conceivable, a supper should have been made for Jesus, after Lazarus was raised from the dead, at which Lazarus was a guest, and Martha waited; and which was evidently done in honour of Christ; while yet the person who entertained the company should doubt of his being a prophet, because the sister of Lazarus was his guest, and Martha who waited, was permitted to touch him! And it is equally inconceivable that the Jews should throng to the house of Martha and Mary to comfort them concerning their brother, if the character of Mary had been so infamous, that it was enough to induce suspicion against one, who was so eminent for his miracles and doctrine, that he permitted her to touch him!—There is every reason to think, that Mary, the sister of Lazarus and Martha, was like her brother and sister in all respects, a person of approved character, even among such as did not receive Jesus as the Messiah: and though the circumstances of the alabaster-box, the anointing of head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39 Now when the Pharisee, which had bidden him, saw it, he spake within himself, saying, [b]This man, if he were a prophet, [c]would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him; for she is a sinner.

40 And Jesus answering, said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41 There was a certain creditor which had two debtors; the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty.

42 And [k]when they had nothing to pay, [l]he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore, which of them will love him most?

43 Simon answered and said, I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44 And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: [s] but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou [q]gavest me no kiss: but this woman, since the time I came in, hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46 My head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47 Wherefore, I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48 And he said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.[9]

49 And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, [x]Who is this that forgiveth sins also?

50 And he said to the woman, [y]Thy faith hath saved thee: [z]go in peace.

CHAP. VIII.

Women minister unto Christ, 1. The parable of the sower, 4, and of the candle, 16. The legion of devils cast out, 26.

AND it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; and the twelve were with him.

2 And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene,[1] out of whom went seven devils,

3 And Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto him of their substance.

4 ¶ And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable:

5 A [k]sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the way-side; and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6 And some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it.

8 And other fell [p]on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit [q]an hundred-fold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

9 ¶ And his disciples asked him, saying, What might this parable be?

10 And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; [u]that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

11 ¶ Now the parable is this; [x]The seed is the word of God.

12 Those [y]by the way-side are they that hear: [z]then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, [a]receive the word with joy; [b]and these have no root, [c]which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

14 And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, [d]and bring no fruit to perfection.

15 But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart,[2] having heard the word, [e]keep it, and [h]bring forth fruit with patience.[3]

16 ¶ No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed;[4] but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

17 For [k]nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest; neither any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he *seemeth to have.

19 ¶ Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press.

20 And it was told him by certain which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

Our Lord had cured her; and, from what is said, she was a woman of property and honour, and is mentioned before Joannah, the wife of Chuza, who must have been a person of rank. our Lord's feet and wiping them with her hair, and the leper being called Simon as well as the Pharisee, seem, at the first glance, to give some plausibility to the opinion; yet the more carefully the connexion of the narrative, the time, the place, the discourse, the woman's motive, the commendation bestowed on each, and, indeed, the whole account, is considered, the fuller must be the reader's conviction, that two different persons and transactions are intended.—St. John indeed records, that Mary anointed Christ's feet: but St. Luke never intimates that this woman anointed his head, as two evangelists do of Mary. This was more suited to the respectful and affectionate freedom of one long honoured with the Saviour's friendship, than with the weeping, trembling diffidence of a new convert, whose life had been notoriously scandalous.

The Woman Accepted.—Ver. 44—50. Our Lord, having approved of Simon's answer, proceeded to apply it to the case in question: and turning to the weeping penitent, he asked whether he did not observe that woman? Simon had indeed noticed her with disdain, and thought that her presence even polluted his house; but he had not duly considered her tears and godly sorrow, and her expressions of grateful love. Our Lord, therefore, in the most beautiful manner, contrasted her conduct with that of the Pharisee. The latter had not even treated him with ordinary respect: when he came into his house, he had not so much as brought him water with which to wash his feet; he had not welcomed him with a friendly kiss, nor given him oil, which was cheap and plentiful, to anoint his head, according to the customs on such occasions: but this despised woman had washed his feet with her tears, and wiped them with her hair; she had incessantly kissed his feet from her first entrance into the room, and had anointed them with the most costly and fragrant ointment. Therefore, though her sins had been very many and aggravated, even more and greater than Simon supposed, yet they were all forgiven, "for she loved much."—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. Chuza.—Ver. 1—3. Some have conjectured that Chuza, Herod's steward, was the nobleman, or courtier, whose son Jesus had cured. Doubtless it was by his consent that his wife accompanied Jesus, when journeying to preach the gospel. As our Lord chose to be "poor for our sakes," and did not work miracles for his own support; so these pious women, who had been under the greatest obligations to him, in respect both to their souls and bodies, being in good circumstances, were glad to commend their substance to the maintenance of him and his disciples, as well as [illegible] did not work miracles for his own support; [illegible] not appear that any men shared [illegible]—Scott.

Effect of Casting out the Devils.—Ver. 34. Let us now see what the effect of this miracle was, of casting the legion of devils out of this man. 1. What effect it had upon the people of that country, who had lost their swine by it. "The swineherds went, and told it both in city and country," perhaps with a design to incense people against Christ; they told "by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed," ver. 36, that it was by sending the devils into the swine, which was capable of an invidious representation, as if Christ could not have delivered the man out of their hands, but by delivering the swine into them. "The people came out to see what was done," and to inquire into it; and "they were afraid," ver. 35, they "were taken with great fear," ver. 37, they were surprised and amazed at it, and knew not what to say to it; they thought more of the destruction of the swine than of the deliverance of their poor afflicted neighbour, and of the country from the terror of his frenzy, which was become a public nuisance; and therefore "the whole multitude besought Christ to depart from them," for fear he should bring some other judgment upon them; whereas indeed none need to be afraid of Christ, that are willing to forsake their sins, and give up themselves to him. But Christ took them at their word; "He went up into the ship, and returned back again." Those lose their Saviour, and their hopes in him, that love their swine better. 2. What effect it had upon the poor man who had recovered himself by it. He "desired" Christ's company as much as others "dreaded" it: he besought Christ that "he might be with him," as others were, "that had been healed by him of evil spirits and infirmities," ver. 2; that Christ might be to him a Protector and Teacher, and that he might be to Christ for a name and a praise. He was loath to stay among those rude and brutish Gadarenes, that desired Christ to depart from them. "O gather not my soul with these sinners!" But Christ would not take him along with him, but sent him home, to publish among those that knew him, the great things God had done for him, that so he might be a blessing to his country, as he had been a burthen to it. We must sometimes deny ourselves the satisfaction even of spiritual benefits and comforts, to gain an opportunity of being serviceable to the souls of others. Perhaps Christ knew that, when the resentment of the loss of their swine was a little over, they would be better disposed to consider the miracle, and therefore left the man among them to be a standing monument, and a monitor to them of it.

21 And he answered and said unto them, [q]My mother and my brethren are these [r]which hear the word of God, and do it.

22 ¶ Now it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples: and he said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23 But as they sailed, he fell asleep: and there came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, [y]Master, Master, we perish! Then [z]he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm.

25 And he said unto them, [a]Where is your faith? And they, being afraid, wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

26 ¶ And they arrived at [c]the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, there [d]met him out of the city [8]a certain man which had devils long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28 When he saw Jesus, [g]he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, [h]What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? [i]I beseech thee, torment me not.[9]

29 (For he had [k]commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains, and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

30 And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, [m]Legion: because many devils were entered into him.

31 And [o]they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep.[10]

32 And there was [q]there an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they [r]besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And [s]he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: [t]and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, [u]they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, [y]sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37 ¶ Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about [a]besought him to depart from them: for they were taken with great fear. And he went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now the man, out of whom the devils were departed, besought him that he might be with him: but Jesus sent him away, saying,

39 Return to thine own house,[11] and shew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned,[12] [s]the people gladly received him: for they were all [h]waiting for him.

41 ¶ And, behold, [l]there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue; [l]and he fell down at Jesus' feet, [m]and besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, [o]and she lay a dying. (But as he went the people thronged him.

43 ¶ And a woman, [q]having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any,

44 Came [t]behind him, and [u]touched the border of his garment: [x]and immediately her issue of blood stanched.

45 And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter, and they that were with him, said, Master, the multitude throng thee, and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me:[13] [z]for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.

47 And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before him, [b]she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: [d]thy faith hath made thee whole; [e]go in peace.)

49 ¶ While [f]he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead; [g]trouble not the Master.

50 But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear not: [h]believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the house, [l]he suffered no man to go in, [k]save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And [l]all wept, and bewailed her: but us notice the "preparatives" for the raising of her to life again. 1. The "choice" Christ made of witnesses that should see the miracle wrought. A "crowd" followed him, but perhaps they were rude and noisy; however, it was not fit to let such a multitude come into a gentleman's house, especially now that the family was all in sorrow; "therefore" he sent them back, and not because he was afraid to let the miracle pass their scrutiny; for he raised Lazarus and the widow's son "publicly." He took none with him but Peter, and James, and John, that triumvirate of his disciples that he was most intimate with, designing these three, with the parents, to be the only spectators of the miracle, they being a competent number to attest the truth of it. 2. The "check" he gave to the mourners; "They all wept and bewailed her;" for, it seems, she was a very agreeable hopeful child, and dear not only to the parents, but to all the neighbours. But Christ bid them "not weep; For she is not dead, but sleepeth." He means, as to her peculiar case, that she was not dead for good and all, but that she should now shortly be raised to life, so that it would be to her friends as if she had been but a few hours asleep. But it is applicable to all that die in the Lord; therefore we should not sorrow for them, as those that have "no hope," because death is but a "sleep" to them, not only as it is a "rest" from all the "toils" of the "days of time," but as there will be a "resurrection," a waking and rising again to all the "glories" of the "days of eternity." This was a comfortable word which Christ said to these mourners, yet they wickedly ridiculed it, and "laughed him to scorn" for it; here was "a pearl cast before swine." They were iguorant of the Scriptures of the Old Testament, who bantered it as an absurd thing to call death a "sleep;" yet this good came out of that evil, that hereby the truth of the miracle was evinced, for they "knew that she was dead," they were certain of it, and therefore nothing less than a "divine power" could restore her to life. We find not any answer that he made them; but he soon "explained himself," I hope to their conviction, so that they would never again laugh at any word of his. But he "put them all out," ver. 54; they were unworthy to be the witnesses of this work of wonder; they, who in the midst of their mourning were so merrily disposed, as to laugh at him for what he "said," would, it may be, have found something to laugh at in what he "did," and therefore are justly shut out. "He took her by the hand," (as we do by one that we awake out of sleep, and help up,) and he called, saying, "Maid, arise." Thus the "hand of Christ's grace" goes along with the "calls of his word," to make them effectual. Here that is expressed, which was only implied in the other evangelists, That "her spirit came again;" her soul returned again, to animate her body.

The Hidden Cure.—Ver. 44. Here is a secret application made to Christ by a woman ill of a "bloody issue," which had been the consumption of her body, and the consumption of her purse too; "for she had spent all her living upon physicians," and was never the better, ver. 43. The nature of her disease was such, that she did not care to make a public complaint of it, (it was agreeable to the modesty of her sex to be very shy of speaking of it,) and therefore she took this opportunity of coming to Christ "in a crowd;" and the more people were present, the more likely she thought it was that she should be "concealed." Her "faith" was very "strong," for she doubted not but that by the "touch" of the "hem of his garment" she should derive from him healing virtue sufficient for her relief, looking upon him to be such a full Fountain of mercies, that she should "steal" a cure, and he not "miss it." Thus many a poor soul is "healed," and "helped," and "saved," by Christ, that is "lost in a crowd," and that nobody takes notice of. The woman found an immediate change for the better in herself, and that her disease was cured, ver. 44. As believers have comfortable communion with Christ, so they have comfortable communications from him incognito—"secretly meat to eat" that the "world knows not" of, and "joy" that a "stranger does not intermeddle with." Here is a discovery of this secret cure, to the glory both of the Physician and the patient. 1. Christ takes notice that there is a cure wrought; "Virtue is gone out of me," ver. 46. Those that have been healed by virtue derived from Christ, must "own" it, for he "knows it." He speaks of it here, not in a way of "complaint," as if he were hereby either "weakened" or "wronged," but in a way of "complacency;" it was his delight, that "virtue" was gone out of him to do any good, and he did not grudge it to the meanest, they were as welcome to it as to the light and heat of the sun; nor had he the less virtue "in him" for the going out of virtue "from him," for he is an "overflowing" Fountain. 2. The poor patient owns her case, and the benefit she had received, ver. 47. "When she saw that she was not hid, she came and fell down before him." Note, The consideration of this, that we cannot be "hid from Christ," should engage us to "pour" out "our hearts before" him, and to show before him our sin, and all our trouble. "She came trembling," and yet "her faith saved her," ver. 38. Note, There may be "trembling," where yet there is saving faith. "She declared before all the people for what cause she had touched him," because she believed that a touch would cure her, and it did so. Christ's patients should communicate their experiences to one another. 3. The great Physician confirms her cure, and sends her away with the comfort of it, ver. 48. "Be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole." Jacob got the blessing from Isaac clandestinely, and by a wile; but when the fraud was discovered, Isaac ratified it designedly; it was obtained "surreptitiously and under-hand, but it was secured and seconded above-board; so was the cure here. He is "blessed," and he "shall be blessed;" so here, she "is" healed, and she "shall be" healed.—Henry.

CHAP. IX.

Christ sendeth out his apostles, 1. Herod is desirous to see him, 7. Christ feedeth five thousand, 12. His transfiguration, 28. He healeth the lunatic, 37.

THEN he called his twelve disciples together, and [b]gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them [c]to preach the kingdom of God,[1] and to heal the sick.

3 And he said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece.

4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5 And [g]whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, [h]shake off the very dust from your feet for [i]a testimony against them.[2]

6 And they departed, and went through the towns, [k]preaching the gospel, and healing every where.

7 ¶ Now [l]Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;

8 And of some, that Elias had appeared; and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9 And Herod said, [o]John have I beheaded: but who is this of whom I hear such things? [p]And he desired to see him.

10 And [q]the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done. And [r]he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city, called [s]Bethsaida.[3]

11 And the people, [t]when they knew it, followed him: [u]and he received them, and spake unto them [x]of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12 ¶ And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said unto him, [z]Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals; [a]for we are here in a desert place.

13 But he said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they said, We have no more but five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14 (For they were about five thousand men.)[4] And he said to his disciples, Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so, and made them all sit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves, and the two fishes; and, looking up to heaven, [f]he blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17 And they did eat, and were all filled: [h]and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets.

18 ¶ And it came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him: and he asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?

19 They answering, said, John the Baptist; but some say, Elias; and others say, That one of the old prophets is risen again.[5]

20 He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter answering, said, [o]The Christ of God.

21 And he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

22 Saying, [q]The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and chief priests, and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.

23 ¶ And he said to them all, [r]If any man will come after me, let him [s]deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

24 For whosoever [u]will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

25 For [x]what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or [y]be cast away?

26 For [z]whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, [a]of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, [b]when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels.

27 But I tell you of a truth, There be some standing here, which shall not [e]taste of death, till they [f]see the kingdom of God.

28 ¶ And it came to pass [g]about an eight days[6] after these [*]sayings, he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

29 And as he prayed, [k]the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistering.

30 And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias:

Practical Observations.—The ministers of Christ should copy his example of assiduity and earnestness, in preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; and in submitting to any hardship or degradation in outward circumstances, which may conduce to the success of the gospel; and they who have profited by their labours, ought to imitate these pious women, and to use their substance in ministering unto Christ, by supporting his indigent servants and disciples, as occasion may require, and according to their ability.—Scott.

Glory of Christ's Coming.—Ver. 26. As Christ had, so his cause has, a state of "humiliation" and of "exaltation." They, and they only, that are willing to suffer with it, when it suffers, shall reign with it, when it reigns: but those that cannot find in their hearts to share with it in its "disgrace," and to say, "If this be to be vile, I will be yet more vile," shall certainly have no share with it in its triumphs. Observe here, how Christ, to support himself and his followers under present disgraces, speaks magnificently of the lustre of his second coming, in prospect of which he "endured the cross, despising the shame." 1. He shall come "in his own glory." This was not mentioned in Matthew and Mark. He shall come in the glory of the Mediator, "all that glory" which the Father "restored to him," which he had with God before the worlds were, which he had deposited and put in pledge, as it were, for the accomplishing of his undertaking, and demanded up again, when he had gone through it: "Now, O Father, glorify thou me," John xvii. 4, 5. He shall come in "all that glory" which the Father "conferred upon him," when "he set him at his own right hand," and "gave him to be Head over all things to the church;" in all the glory that is due to him, as the Asserter of the glory of God, and the Author of the glory of all the saints. This is "his own glory." 2. He shall come "in his Father's glory." The Father will judge the world by him, having committed all judgment to him; and therefore will publicly own him in the judgment, as the "Brightness of his glory," and the "express Image" of his person. 3. He shall come in "the glory of the holy angels." They shall all attend him, and minister to him, and add every thing they can to the lustre of his appearance. What a figure will the blessed Jesus make in that day! Did we believe it, we should never be ashamed of him or his words now.

Lunatic Boy.—See Mark ix. 17.

Christ's Rebuke of Ambition.—Ver. 46—48. This passage we had before, and, the more is the pity, shall meet with the like again. Observe here, 1. Ambition of honour, and strife for superiority and precedency, are sins that most easily beset the disciples of our Lord Jesus, for which they deserve to be severely rebuked; they flow from corruptions, which they are highly concerned to subdue and mortify. They that expect to be "great" in this world, commonly aim high, and nothing will serve them short of being "greatest;" this exposes them to a great deal of temptation and trouble, which they are safe from, that are content to be "little," to be "least," to be "less than the least." 2. Jesus Christ is perfectly acquainted with the thoughts and intents of our hearts. He "perceived their thoughts:" they are words to him, and whispers are loud cries. It is a good reason why we should keep up a strict government of our thoughts, because Christ takes a strict cognizance of them. 3. Christ will have his disciples to aim at that honour which is to be obtained by a quiet and condescending humility, and not at that which is to be obtained by a restless and aspiring ambition. Christ "took a child, and set him by him," (for he always expressed a tenderness and kindness for little children,) and he proposed "this child" to them for an example. (1.) Let them be of the temper of this child, humble and quiet, and easy to itself; let them not affect worldly pomp, or grandeur, or high titles, but be as dead to them as this child; let them bear no more malice to their rivals and competitors than this child did. Let them be willing to be "the least," if that would contribute any thing to their usefulness, to stoop to the meanest office whereby they might "do good." (2.) Let them assure themselves that this was the way to preferment; for this would recommend them to the esteem of their brethren: they that loved Christ, would "therefore receive" them "in his name," because they did most resemble him! and they would likewise recommend themselves to his favour, for Christ would take the kindnesses done to them as done to himself; "Whosoever shall receive one such child," a preacher of the gospel that is of such a disposition as this, he placeth his respect aright, and "receiveth me;" and "whosoever receiveth me" in such a minister, "receiveth him that sent me;" and what greater honour can any man attain to in this world, than to be received by men as a messenger of God and Christ, and to have God and Christ own themselves received and welcomed in him? This honour have all the humble disciples of Jesus Christ, and thus they shall be truly great, that are least among them.

of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.[7]

32 But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: [s]and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said.

34 While he thus spake, there came a cloud and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud.

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, [x]This is my beloved Son; [y]hear him.[8]

36 And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

37 ¶ And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son; for he is mine only child.

39 And, lo, a spirit taketh him,[9] and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again; and, bruising him, hardly departeth from him.

40 And I besought thy disciples to cast him out; and they could not.

41 And Jesus, answering, said, [f]O faithless and perverse generation! [h]how long shall I be with you, [i]and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him. And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.

43 ¶ And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God. But, while they wondered every one at all things which Jesus did, he said unto his disciples, 44 Let these sayings sink down into your ears: [p]for the Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men.

45 But they understood not this saying,[10] and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that saying.

46 ¶ Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47 And Jesus, [s]perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by him,

48 And said unto them, [u]Whosoever shall receive this child in my name, receiveth me; and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth him that sent me: for he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.
